THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 30, 1864.

THE letter addressed by Mr. Joshua Williams to the Bar (which was inserted ante, p. 284), is written by a gentleman who has evidently thought much upon the subject of law reporting, and whose thoughts and suggestions deserve consideration. Mr. Williams puts forth three propositions as the groundwork of amendment in the present system of reporting:—

1. That all judgments of the superior courts should, as far as practicable, be written.
2. That all judgments of the superior courts not committed to writing before delivery should be committed to writing, under the authority of the Court, as soon as possible after delivery.
3. That access to all the judgments of the superior courts should be afforded to every member of the Profession as speedily and cheaply as possible.

The second proposition appears to comprehend the first, and the two together to amount to a proposition, "that all judgments of the superior courts are, before or after delivery, to be reduced to writing, but that, as far as is practicable, they should be reduced to writing before delivery"—i. e. by the judges themselves.

Now, a very little consideration of the different classes of cases which come before the superior courts will lead to the conclusion, that it would be almost absurd to reduce to writing the judgments upon a large proportion of them. In very many cases, the decision is a matter of course, in very many the point, or rather the pretended point, is too clear for argument; no principle of law is involved in it, or the principle which applies is already so clearly established and so conclusively applicable, that it would be useless to record the case. The present reporters make no mention of at least one-half of the business of the courts for one or other of these reasons, because, in fact, to use a common expression, "there is nothing in them to report." If, then, we are to interpret Mr. Williams's propositions literally, they would burden the records of the court with a quantity of useless matter, and impose a great amount of needless labour on the individual whose lot it might be to record the decisions of the judges. If, on the other hand, Mr. Williams does not intend that every decision on every matter, great or small, that is to come before the courts, is to be reported, and limits his propositions to decisions of importance, who is to select? Does he intend the judges, in addition to their present duties, to wade through the mass of trifling matters which occupy a great portion of their time, and of which it would be utterly useless to preserve a record? or in what other way does he propose to limit the labours of the judges or of the officer who is to record their proceedings? We collect from his letter that he intends the reporters to exercise the function of selection; that they are to sift the large mass of decisions which the judges, or the officer appointed for that purpose, have reduced to writing, and extract from it such cases as they think deserving of being reported; and that the superiority of one report over another would depend upon the judgment exercised in the selection of cases.

Now, in the first place, the judges themselves must be important agents in carrying out this scheme; and it will certainly be as well to ask some of their Lordships to become members of the committee, or at all events to give the benefit of their suggestions and experience before a measure is resolved upon which proposes to cast upon them fresh duties and responsibilities; which duties and responsibilities, moreover, it will be perfectly optional with them to undertake, unless they are compelled to do so by an act of Parliament. Mr. Williams proposes that they should themselves reduce to writing, or should superintend and revise the reduction by others to writing, of all the judgments which they deliver, and, if we understand him rightly, they must do this with all possible speed, in order that the judgments may be published as speedily as possible.

Mr. Williams's propositions would really very much increase the number of cases reported, whereas we are strongly inclined to think, and we believe the Profession generally think, that far too many cases are reported under the present system. If he intends that all the decisions of the Courts, reduced into writing by themselves or their officers, are to be sold to the public, the public would then be supplied with a quantity of matter, not one-fourth of which would be of the slightest use. If, on the other hand, he means that the public (and by the public we intend the legal public) should buy the selections of cases made by reporters, then he leaves us where we are at present—for very few instances can be given of any case of importance which the reporters, under the present system, have omitted. The complaint certainly is rather that they report too much than too little. But Mr. Williams may say, and with some justice, that reporters do not always give correct reports of the judgments. This defect in the case of written judgments, at all events, would be obviated by an easier access to those judgments being afforded to all the reporters. In the case of verbal judgments, no doubt, a short-hand writer, employed as an officer of the Court, would be a tolerably sure mode of recording what the judges say, and he might be instructed to furnish copies of his notes to such of the reporters as require them, on payment of a fee or otherwise. In which case those reports which are known to obtain copies of his notes would probably stand higher with the Profession than those which do not. So far we agree with Mr. Williams's propositions, as a more satisfactory and certain mode of obtaining the unwritten judgments would be secured. But supposing this to be done, those who now buy reports will continue to buy them, and to look to them only as the means of learning the decisions of the Courts. No one would dream of buying the whole mass of matter which Mr. Williams proposes to "print and publish as soon as possible, at the lowest price that will cover the expense of publication." Faith will still be put in the judgment and care exercised by the reporters in their selection of cases; and, moreover, there is another reason why the reports should be preferred.

In important cases, at all events, it is useful to have an abstract of the arguments of counsel, which throw light upon the judgments, and contain the authorities upon which they are grounded. Mr. Williams, of course, does not include these arguments in his scheme; he proposes only to reduce to writing, and print the judgments themselves.

Mr. Williams says, in another paragraph, "The records which form the sources of history are all officially preserved, but history itself is written by individuals whose success is proportioned to the ability they display in selecting and digesting." Now, it is not every trifling matter that occurs in the course of a nation's life, and involves no question of constitutional importance, which is recorded; it is only the striking facts and startling events that take place, not the everyday occurrences, which are registered; and, therefore, the historian who consults these records has not much labour in selection. His labour rather consists in searching for sources of information from other quarters; such as memoirs, diaries, and biographies. The records themselves would furnish but meagre materials for a history, and are never published separately, or, if published, find but few purchasers.

There must, in fact, be reporters. No schemes that we are aware of can dispense with them, or with the reliance which must be placed on their care and capacity. Mr. Williams's proposals do not appear to us to touch the evils which are alleged to exist in the present system, except so far as they might secure more correct copies of the judgments; and this can only be done by the judges taking upon themselves a task which would add very much to their labour, viz. superintending the notes of their decisions taken down by the short-hand writer, or by implicit faith being put in the accuracy of his notes, if the judges do not superintend. But surely skilful and able as the short-hand writers are, it is more likely that the reporters will be correct in their reports of the judgments than the short-hand writers, who are not thoroughly acquainted with legal phraseology.

We have thus stated what appear to us to be the defects in Mr. William's scheme. The subject is, no doubt, replete with difficulty and difference of opinion, and it is easier to criticise than to suggest. As we have stated, we think one great objection to his proposals is, that, as to a large proportion of the matters which come before the courts, the judges could not be expected "to peruse and sign a copy of their judgments taken down by a short-hand writer;" and, as to the residue, with respect to written judgments, no short-hand writer would be required; and, with respect to unwritten judgments, that there may be occasional mistakes made by the present reporters, but that, on the whole, they correctly report the judgments.

REMARKS.

Manual on Common Law. By JOSEPH W. SMITH, B. C. L., Q. C. Second Edition.

[Stevens, Sons, & Haynes.]

THE learned author tells us in his Preface to the Second Edition of this work, that it has cost him nearly three years' labour to produce it. Considering the wide range of matter over which the Manual extends, we can easily understand the amount of toil and care and research which he has expended upon it, and we congratulate him upon the result. With reference, however, to one class of persons to whom Mr. Smith seems to think the work will be useful, namely, students commencing their legal studies, we hold a different opinion. For such students we think the book would not be useful, inasmuch as the natural indolence of the human mind is such, that it seizes at any opportunity of acquiring knowledge without labour, and therefore many a student would be content to take for granted the propositions of law which he finds in a condensed form in the Manual, instead of searching them out for himself in the text-books and reports, and so engraving them in his mind by labour and reflection. To more advanced students and to the practitioner, whether barrister or attorney, we think the Manual a most useful and convenient companion, enabling them, as it does, speedily to refresh their memories on any rule of law on which they may be called upon to advise, and referring them to the authorities on which the rule is founded. Few practitioners can have failed to observe how strangely the most elementary rules of law occasionally slip out of the mind, rules which a man knew well when he was a pupil, but which, simply, because he has not had for some time to consider them, he forgets or feels doubtful upon. This Manual of Mr. Smith's is a protection against such accidents. It is compiled with the scrupulous care and the ability which distinguish Mr. Smith's previous works, and it enables the reader, by investigation of the authorities cited, to test the accuracy of the propositions which are laid down in it. By persons who already have acquired some knowledge of the subjects of which it treats, and also by the layman, who wishes to have a general knowledge of those branches of the law with which, in his course through life, he may come in contact, we think this Manual will be found a most useful guide.

Dialogue between a Doctor of Laws and a Student, touching the Reasons why the Lord Chancellor's "Land Transfer Act is not generally used."—Pp. 18.

[Sweet.]

THE doctor defends the solicitors from the Lord Chancellor's charge of combining to prevent the use of his act, and asserts, that the real reason why the act is not used is, "that the solicitors are compelled to comply with the desires of the landowners themselves, whose eagerness to possess large landed estates, and to retain them, and to transmit them entire to their descendants, causes that great length of deeds, of which so much complaint has been made, and adds to the expense of every fresh sale." He explains, in a few words, and very clearly, the essential difference between settlements of land and settlements of stock, as regards the mode of dealing with the settled property. "The local influence and importance which attach to the ownership of land, and the love of territorial aggrandisement, induce men even to borrow money to enable them to become landed proprietors, or to enlarge the existing boundaries of their estates. You can easily imagine, then, how a landed proprietor, with the love of acquiring land, will adopt any shift or contrivance to enable him to keep it in his family, rather than sell any part of it; he will mortgage it, charge it with jointure and portions; in short, do anything rather than sell; for however deeply a landed estate is thus charged and burthened, the owner still remains in the eyes of the world the sole proprietor, and retains almost the same local influence and prestige as if the estate were unincumbered. You will easily see that this is not the case with a money fund. The natural way of providing portions out of it is, by selling enough to raise them. There is no object in keeping the fund in existence, as a large money fund, charged to nearly its full value with all sorts of incumbrances; no local influence attaches to such a property."

The remedy, according to the doctor, for the complication of titles produced by settlements and charges is, not to establish an incumbered estates court, but to abolish the variety of modifications and subdivisions of which the legal and beneficial ownerships are now capable. A fee-simple and a lease for years should be the only legal estates; and an estate for life and a reversion in fee the only equitable interests. "For you will readily understand, that after a purchaser has become the registered owner, with the simple title conferred by the act, he will, while the present state of things last, immediately begin to settle, tie up, and incumber his property as before; and all his deeds of settlement will be precisely of the same purport, and of the same length as at present. Moreover, they will all have to be registered at full length in the register office."

It is not, we think, in the future that practitioners see the main objections to the use of the act. They justly fear the delay and additional expense attending the establishment of a Parliamentary title, with the chance of failure, on technical grounds, after all; and as titles are practically safe and sound, without the help of Lord Westbury's Office, they see no inducement to incur delay and expense.

The doctor does not hope that landowners will be persuaded to give up the substance of any of the powers they now have in settling and charging land, and we agree with him. It is neither to be expected nor to be desired that they should do so. The palliatives he suggests are—1. That the registrar should be authorised to accept any title that is satisfactory to him, though it be not strictly marketable. 2. That the public advertisements required by the act should not be required. The Court of Chancery will form a marketable title in a purchaser without any advertisement; and a purchaser has as just a claim to protection as any existing latent claimant. 3. That the registrar should have authority to decide questions of boundary. 4. That the period of limitation of actions and suits relating to real property should be reduced to ten years.

The doctor thinks that the act, even as it stands, will be very useful to persons intending to mortgage their estates. We doubt this. Few persons commence a course of mortgaging of malice prepense, or with any anticipation of the ultimate consequences. The progress of the disease is in most cases slow and insidious.

We must wait for the true remedy until the Seals change hands. The first step in the course of law reform to be taken by the next holder of them is obvious and safe, and will not be a small one. It will be to repeal the Land Transfer Act with the rest of "Lord Westbury's Acts." It will not then be very difficult to establish a system of bookkeeping in a public office, which will shew by mere inspection the actual state of any title at any given moment.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday, July 25.

The royal assent was given to the Inland Revenue (Stamp Duties) Bill.

The Stamp Duties Amendment Act passed through committee.

Tuesday, July 26.

The Judgments Law Amendment Bill was read a third time, and passed, Lord St. Leonards opposing it strongly.

The Criminal Justice Act, 1855, Extension Bill passed through committee.

The Stamp Duties Act Amendment Bill was read a third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday, July 25.

Colonel W. Patten rose to call the attention of the House to the report of the committee on the Revision of the Standing Orders. The committee, after much consideration, resolved to recommend the adoption of certain resolutions; and if he could persuade the House to agree to the report of the committee, next session referees would be appointed, who would have, in connexion with private bills, to determine certain facts, the investigation of which would thus be withdrawn from the committees of the House. There was some delay in coming to a conclusion, in consequence of the reluctance of the Speaker to assume the responsibility of appointing the referees. The committee were, however, so strongly of opinion that it was desirable that the whole system should be in the body of the House, and unconnected with any public office, that they renewed their request to the Speaker, who was then good enough to express his willingness to undertake the duty if the House required it. The committee had made some alterations in the definition of subjects to be submitted to the referees. In regard to the second class of questions, for instance, it had been decided that only the details of traffic should be referred to the tribunal. Although the resolutions had not met with the entire approbation of all concerned, he was bound to acknowledge the spirit of fairness with which they had been considered. The parliamentary bar and the parliamentary agents had expressed their readiness to give the new system a fair trial, and such he understood was also the disposition of honourable members. If the resolutions did not accomplish the object with which they had been proposed to save the time of the House and to diminish the expense to suitors, he should be quite ready to move their repeal. The committee had agreed, not unanimously, but by a large majority, to recommend that Private Bill Committees should each consist of three instead of five members. Another alteration which was recommended with the view of expediting the private business of the House, and of advancing bills early in the session was, that the time allowed for petitions should be ten days after the first reading instead of eight days after the second reading. He moved the repeal of the present Standing Orders relative to private bills.

Sir J. Shelley thought that so important a subject should have been brought forward earlier in the year. The hon. and gallant gentleman had, however, in some degree, disarmed opposition, by pledging himself to move the repeal of the resolutions, if they did not prove effectual in saving the time of the House and the money of the suitors, as he for one feared they would fail to do. He understood his hon. and gallant friend to undertake, that if the new plan was not found satisfactory, he would propose its repeal. He was, however, afraid that it was exactly in the fact, that this was an experiment, that the real danger lay, and that this might be the first step towards taking away from the committees of that House their jurisdiction over private bills.

Sir F. Goldsmid questioned the expediency of the proposal for appointing referees. Experience, he thought, proved, that wherever the attempt had been made to divide a judicial inquiry into two parts, the one part to be dealt with by one tribunal, and the other part by another, the system had operated unsatisfactorily, and been attended with additional expense.

Colonel W. Patten moved, that the number of members be reduced from five to three.

Mr. H. Baillie objected to the reduction from five to three members, on account of the effect it would produce should any of the members of the committee fall ill.

Mr. Watkins objected leaving private bills to be decided by committees of only three members instead of five.

Lord Hotham concurred.

After several divisions, it was settled that the number should be four; and the debate was adjourned.

Tuesday, July 26.

MUTUAL SURRENDER OF CRIMINALS (PRUSSIA) BILL.

On the motion for going into committee upon this bill which was given ante, p. 270,

Mr. White and Mr. Hennessey opposed.

After a long discussion, in which

Mr. S. Fitzgerald pointed out a difference between this and the French act, as this act compelled the surrender of a person in this country on the production of an authenticated copy of his conviction, and on proof of his identity.

The debate was adjourned.

Wednesday, July 27.

STANDING ORDERS.

Sir M. Peto opposed the changes proposed, and thought that too many restrictions ought not to be placed on promoters of bills.

Colonel W. Patten then proposed the adoption of a new Standing Order, that the Chairman of Ways and Means, with not less than three other persons, appointed by the Speaker, should be referees of the House on private bills.

Mr. Massey moved as an amendment, that they should not be members of the House.

Colonel W. Patten agreed.

Sir G. Bowyer doubted if an engineer of eminence would act as referee. He thought that the promoters ought to be obliged to put in a written statement of their facts.

Mr. Ayrton thought it wrong to exclude members from being referees. The House ought not to abandon the privilege of dealing with these bills, but ought to adopt a regular set of rules.

Mr. H. Baillie opposed the scheme.

Mr. A. Mills wished to have the committees armed with additional powers.

Mr. Roebuck, Sir J. Shelley, and Mr. S. Booth thought it too late to bring this matter before the House, and proposed an adjournment for a month.

Mr. Lowe, Mr. D. Griffith, and Lord Palmerston opposed an adjournment.

The motion for an adjournment was lost.

After much more discussion, the rule as amended was adopted.

The Speaker said he should have been glad if some indication had been given of the persons whom the House wished to be appointed referees. There seemed to be an objection to engineers.

On consideration of another rule, it was stated, that the referees would be paid under a vote of the House.

On Order 86 D., which prescribes that rules of practice and procedure should be made by the Chairman of Ways and Means,

Sir J. Shelley moved, that only one counsel should appear before the referees on each petition. This would save much time and expense to the parties.

Sir M. Peto asked whether any counsel at all were necessary? Surely the solicitors and agents could do all that was wanted. If counsel were let in, not one or two, but half-a-dozen courts would be necessary.

Colonel W. Patten said, it was at the suggestion of the parliamentary agents themselves that counsel were to be admitted. The Chairman of Ways and Means, however, would be empowered to regulate the proceedings before the referees.

Mr. M. Gibson did not think it right to lay down any rule against the employment of counsel altogether.

Dr. Brady said, that the parliamentary agents were interested in the employment of counsel, and was of opinion, that by excluding counsel business would be facilitated, and the expenses reduced.

Mr. Locke said, that perhaps the hon. gentleman would like the parties to toss up which side should win. The employment of counsel was for the interest of the parties, who naturally desired that their case should be stated in the best manner, and the right to retain counsel for the purpose of these proceedings ought not to be restricted.

Mr. S. Fitzgerald supported the proposal of the hon. baronet, that only one counsel should be allowed to appear. It would not be desirable to leave the Chairman of Ways and Means, who was himself a barrister, to adopt what might appear an invidious rule to his profession.

Mr. Ingham thought the proposal of the hon. baronet a reasonable one.

Mr. D. Griffith, acknowledging the efforts of the President of the Board of Trade to regulate the fees of the parliamentary bar, asked whether any further success had attended them.

Mr. M. Gibson could not give much information on this subject beyond that which was already in the possession of the House. The doctrine which he held was simply this—that the fees of the parliamentary bar should be regulated as the fees in the ordinary courts of law and equity were regulated. He was informed that the doors of the committee rooms were now thrown open, and that members of the equity and common-law bars could now come in and practise there without incurring the displeasure of the parliamentary bar.

Mr. Cox pointed out, that by allowing only one counsel to appear in each petition, the promoters would have but a single counsel against, perhaps, half a dozen retained for different petitions against the bill.

Captain Jervis thought the restriction a most salutary one, for the result would be the employment of one counsel, who would stay throughout the proceedings, and attend exclusively to the case.

Order 86 D., as amended, was then agreed to.

On the consideration of Order 86 E., which was as follows:—"The referees shall inquire into all or any of the following matters as to which parties petitioning against any bill desire to be heard in opposition, viz.—1. In the case of bills of the second class, for authorising the construction of works, the engineering details of the undertaking, the efficiency of the works for the proposed object, and the sufficiency of the estimate for executing the same. 2. In the case of bills for authorising a new line of railway, the statistics of the traffic proposed to be accommodated. 3. In the case of water-work bills, the nature and amount of the existing, and the proposed source of supply, the quality of the water in each case, and the provisions as to storage reservoirs. 4. In the case of bills, the quality of the gas, the existing supply and its price, the amount of pressure, the cost of production, and the modes of testing the purity and illuminating power of the gas."

After a short discussion, this order, except clause 2, was passed.

Colonel W. Patten then moved Order 86 F.:—"So soon as the inquiry into the matters referred to them upon any bill has been completed, the referees shall make their report upon the same to the House, and the report shall thereupon stand referred to the select committee on the bill. No further evidence shall be taken by the committee to prove or disprove any of the facts reported by the referees."

This order, with an amendment that the committee were to state their reasons, was carried.

Several other Standing Orders as to the referees, were then passed.

Mr. Scourfield moved a string of resolutions as to the bona fides of deposits and subscriptions, but withdrew them.

PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Michaelmas Educational Term, by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

The Reader will trace the History of our Constitution from the reign of Charles the First down to the last period which the time allotted to the Course of Lectures will allow him to reach.

He will dwell on the Legal History of each reign, as recorded in the Statute-book, the State Trials, and the Reports.

In his Private Classes he will pursue the same plan from the reign of James the Second to the close of that of William the Third, and then return to the early History of our Constitution.

The books to which he will constantly refer are—Rapin's History—Blackstone's Commentaries, edition by Kerr—Hallam's Constitutional History—Chapter on the Constitution in Hallam's Middle Ages—Brodie's History—Burnet's Memoirs—Lord Clarendon's History and Correspondence—May's History—State Trials—Somers's Tracts—Lord St. Leonards' Preface to Gilbert on Uses—Milton's Prose Works—Matthew Paris—Sullivan's Lectures—Cressy on the Constitution.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, Two Courses of Public Lectures (there being six Lectures in each Course), on the following subjects:—

Elementary Course.

1. On the Origin and Nature of the Feudal System, the Private Jurisdictions to which it gave rise, and their influence on Judicial Procedure in England.
2. On the Establishment and History of the Court of Chancery.
3. On the Limits of the Equitable Jurisdiction, and on Appeals from Decisions of the Court of Chancery.
4. On the Jurisdiction in Lunacy.

An Advanced Course.

1. On Judicial Procedure in General.
2. On the Principles of Equity Pleading.
3. On the Maxims of Equity.
4. On the Jurisdiction of Courts of Equity concurrent with that of Courts of Law.

In the Elementary Private Class, the subjects discussed will be—The Creation and Incidents of Express Trusts, and the Remedies for Breaches of Trusts.

In the Advanced Private Class, the Lectures will comprehend—Implied and Resulting Trusts, and the Doctrine of Equitable Conversion.

THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property, &c. proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, Two Courses of Public Lectures (there being Six Lectures in each Course), on the following subjects:—

Elementary Course.

The Effect of the Statutes known as Lord St. Leonards' and Lord Cranworth's Acts, upon the Law of Real Property.

Advanced Course.

The Proprietary Rights of Husband and Wife.

1. The Common-law Doctrine.
2. The Equity Doctrines.
3. Marriage Settlements.
4. Separate Estate—Separation Deeds—and Judicial Separation.

In his Private Classes, the Reader on the Law of Real Property will, with his Elementary Class, endeavour to go through a Course of Real Property Law, using the work of Mr. Joshua Williams as a Text-book; and with his Advanced Class, the Reader will examine and comment upon Cases selected from Mr. Tudor's Leading Cases in Conveyancing.

JURISPRUDENCE, THE CIVIL LAW, AND INTERNATIONAL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence, the Civil Law, and International Law proposes, in the ensuing Educational Term, to deliver Six Public Lectures upon the following subjects:—

1. The Influence of the Roman Law upon the Prinicipal Systems of Modern Jurisprudence, and particularly upon the Systems of England and her Colonies.

2. The Historical Development of the Roman Law.

3. The Present State of the Law of Commercial Blockade, and the expediency of its Amendment.

In his Private Class, the Reader will commence the Course of Roman Civil Law, with the consideration of the Roman Law of Contracts, using Sandars's Edition of Justinian's Institutes, and the Systema Juris Romani of Mackeldey as Text-books, and contrast it with the Modern French Law upon the same head.

The Reader in his Private Class will also discuss points of International Law, relating to the Rights and Obligations of Neutrals, using the work of Wheaton as the Text-book, and referring to the works of the principal modern Jurists, the decisions of the Admiralty and Prize Courts of England and America, the Debates in Parliament, and State Papers relating to the cases under discussion.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, Two Courses of Six Public Lectures each, upon the following subjects:—

Elementary Course.

1. The proper Method of Studying Law, by reference to Principles and Leading Cases.
2. The Nature and Origin of our Common Law, into what Departments it is subdivided.
3. How and to what extent Personal Liberty and the Rights of Property are protected at Common Law.

Advanced Course.

1. The Source whence our Common Law has been derived, as indicated in the Judgments of our Courts.
2. Maxims and Principles to which our Common Law conforms, as exemplified by Cases.
3. The respective Functions of Judge and Jury, and the Method of Judicial Reasoning.

With his Elementary Private Classes, the Reader will trace out the leading sub-divisions of our Common Law—Civil, Quasi-Criminal, and Criminal. He will also examine those portions of the Statutory and Customary Law which concern the Liberty of the Subject and Rights of Property; using for reference the following books:—Stephen's Commentaries (last edition) and Broom's Commentaries (last edition).

With his Advanced Private Class, the Reader will specify and explain the Leading Maxims of our Common Law, and shew how they may be usefully applied by the Practitioner. He will also minutely investigate the respective functions of Judge and Jury, and in connexion therewith will examine the more important Rules of Evidence, using as Text-books—Broom's Legal Maxims (4th edition) and Taylor on Evidence (4th edition).

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 6, 1864.

THE pending discussion upon the existing system of law reporting, and upon the amendments proposed to be made in it, naturally lead to a consideration of legal literature generally, and of the merits and demerits of modern publications of this description. A simple-minded person would infer, from the number of such books which are brought into the world, that the authorship of a law book was a certain source either of immediate profit, in the way of a large sale of the work, or of ultimate profit, in the shape of an establishment or increase of reputation to the author. But that the real state of the case negatives such an inference, few, we think, will deny; and it is a question of some interest why so many learned gentlemen expend so much time, and labour, and midnight oil, upon the composition of works the greater portion of which are doomed only to line trunks, or serve as wrappers to more favourite productions. To a certain extent, the increase in the number of legal publications is caused by the increase of our statute-book, and by that enlarged development of our laws generally which is created by the lapse of time, and the many new combinations of circumstances to which those laws have to be applied, and which give rise to discussion as to the applicability of this or that law; but the whole increase cannot be attributed to this cause. There is a rage for legal authorship which must be traced to some other source. Now, whether a book be on a legal or a lay subject, at all events there is a motive which may be common to all authors—viz. a desire to compose a work which will really and truly explain, and teach and illustrate, the subject of which it treats, so as to make it intelligible to those for whom it is intended, and to acquaint them with the sources from which the author has derived his information, and the views which he propounds. A law book of this description we may style a law book of the first class—a book on which care and labour have been expended, which is written with the view of setting forth the law upon the particular subject—dividing into proper heads, and lucidly arranging, the several branches of the subject, and faithfully giving the authorities in the shape of common-law statutes and cases, by which the law has been created and altered. One difference between books on a legal and books on any other subject is, that in the latter the reader looks for the opinions and experiences of the author himself upon any moot point discussed in his book; whereas in a law book the author's opinions are not required, and, indeed, unless he is an acknowledged sage of the law, might be considered presumptuous. It is his duty to set forth the different judicial opinions entertained upon any point, and he may modestly say to which side his own inclines; but it is certainly not a defect in a law book that the author withholds his own views. It would be invidious to mention any particular modern law book which we consider especially worthy of the character of a first class book. There are several such books, but few will say that they form a large proportion of the books which are written. Horace says, "Est vetus atque probus centum qui perficit annos." How many law books are there which are likely to reach this age? Expensive works are daily published, which must or ought to have exhausted the energies, and power of labour and application, of their authors, and they die almost in their birth. It is, indeed, a discouraging thought to those who are inclined to increase the stock of good books, and compose works which will outlive them, and be useful to their professional brethren, that the probability is, their labour will be expended in vain; and the reflection is not enlivened by the further thought, of the great amount of repulsive investigation, and dry uninteresting labour which a legal author, who really wishes to be scrupulously careful and accurate, must undergo. In fine, the man who has written a solid, well-digested, and learned book on an important legal subject deserves much more of his Profession than is generally admitted, and, moreover, deserves to stand high among them as a man of honesty, and energy, and ability.

There is another class of law books, including by far the greater number of legal publications, which do not profess to treat of an entire subject; they take a particular branch, which may happen at the time to be exciting attention and discussion, or they may be limited, further, to some particular point. Now, we doubt whether one-tenth of these books pay the expenses of publication. In the first place, the class of purchasers is limited, namely, the legal Profession; and, in the next, very few of that limited class are fond of buying books. The barrister in practice starts with his few standard text-books, and only thinks of increasing his law library by the reports. If he has an excess of money, he does not spend it in literature of this description, and, in fact, we think it will be found that the older a man grows, the less inclined is he to buy books which are not actually necessary for his practice. Then what does become of all these publications, and how is it that there continues to be such a supply of them? The most probable way of accounting for it is, that it is considered useful to a man to have written a book, no matter whether the book is well written or not, or whether it is extensively read, or is published at a loss to the author or the publisher. The book has been advertised for some time before its appearance, and so the author's name is circulated. In fact, instances might be mentioned of books so advertised which never appeared at all. Many persons think that, because a man has written a book upon a particular subject, he must know more about it than other persons do. They do not read the book themselves, and they give him credit for having well and ably studied the subject on which he writes. At all events, we believe it is the hope that some persons will so think which causes many law books to be written. This may be a perfectly fair and reasonable hope; but still a man who publishes a book surely owes a duty to the Profession, namely, the duty of composing a work which shall be as correct and useful as he can make it, so that the time and money of those who purchase it may not be wasted. It is to be feared that many purchasers of modern law books do complain that their time and money has been thrown away, so much so, that a really good book enters upon the world with a prejudice against it which it is difficult to overcome.

It may be said, that if people are so silly as to think a man must be profoundly acquainted with a subject, because he has written a book upon it, they should be left to the consequences of their simplicity, and learn wisdom by suffering; and that if a man chooses to write a book which does not pay the expenses of publication, the cost is his; and supposing he does gain any advantage by the advertising of the book, it can be but for a short space of time, unless he is really well acquainted with his subject. All this may be quite true if an author owes no duty to his Profession. When we are considering the present condition of legal literature, and the causes of that condition, it does occur to us that a legal author, as we have already observed, does owe a duty to his Profession; and that, for the sake of the Profession, it is incumbent upon him to write as good a book as he can, and to expend all necessary time and labour upon it. He should work at it in the hope that, sooner or later, an able work, on a well chosen subject, makes its way into, and attains its proper position in, public opinion, and repays, by increased circulation and increased reputation, the care and labour which its author has expended upon it.

While upon the subject of legal publications, we cannot refrain from making a remark which addresses itself rather to the publishers than the authors of law books. We refer to the present fashion of binding such books in colours, which make them look more like novels, or biographies, or books of travels, than books on a grave and difficult subject. Why should a law book be sent into the world with a binding of bright green or bright yellow colour, such as adorns the books issued by the fashionable publishers. Binding of a sober hue is better adapted to a work which requires, or ought to require, close reading and earnest thought; whereas we look generally for light matter and easy reading in books which have these bright and fanciful bindings. We shall not be surprised to see a portrait of the author in the next law book which comes out so gorgeously dressed.

This subject of binding is, of course, but of trivial importance when compared with the inside of the book; but a feather shews which way the wind blows, and it may be that this change from the sober colours in which law books used to be bound to bright and glowing hues is some indication that less care is taken about the composition of the books themselves, and that it is sought rather to attract the eye than the intellect of the purchaser.

REGISTRAR IN BANKRUPTCY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. P. R. Welch, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-law, to be a Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy for the Leeds District, in the room of Mr. Wilde, retired. Mr. Welch was called to the bar in 1839, and has for many years gone the Northern Circuit.

TITLE TO LAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—In your last number, under a review of "A Dialogue on the Lord Chancellor's Land Transfer Act," practitioners are represented as considering titles to be safe and sound.

The case of Hunt v. Eames (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 200) appears to be an authority for the proposition, that a bona fide purchaser, for valuable consideration, without notice, is liable to be dispossessed, though holding the genuine title deeds and vendor's conveyance. The case of Taaffe v. Conmee (8 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 919) shews the confusion which exists on the meaning of the word "survivor," when applied to real estate.

Mr. Joshua Williams, in his work on Real Property (6th ed., p. 377), draws attention to theoretical danger.

Permit me to ask the practitioners who are represented to assert the state of titles to be "safe and sound," how they reconcile their opinion with the authorities above given?

Your obedient,
W. S.

JUDGMENT, &c. LAW AMENDMENT—27 & 28 VICT. c. 112.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I would call the attention of the Profession to the important alteration effected by this new act, in the law of judgments as they affect real property.

Sect. 1 enacts, that no future judgments shall affect any land until such land shall have been actually delivered in execution.

Sect. 3 provides, that every execution under which any land shall have been so delivered, shall be registered in the Common Pleas in the name of the debtor. [It is presumed, that in such case the creditor should register his writ of execution forthwith.]

Sect. 4 further provides, that any creditor to whom any land shall have been actually delivered, and whose execution shall have been duly registered, shall be entitled forthwith to obtain from the Court of Chancery, upon petition in a summary way, an order for the sale of his debtor's interest in such land.

Purchasers, with or without notice, will not, therefore, be bound by any future judgments till the creditor is in possession. Of this fact, and of the intention of the creditor to apply for an order for sale, due notoriety will be given by registration, and all persons claiming any interest in such land, as well as purchasers, may inform themselves, by inspecting the register, of the intention of the creditor to apply to the Court for an order for sale, and they will be entitled to the proceeds according to their respective priorities. A creditor, after having complied with the requirements of the act, may, without waiting for the expiration of the year (see the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13), petition the Court forthwith for an order for sale.

It may be inferred, that a judgment creditor will not take any priority as to his debtor's land until the land has been actually delivered in execution. Therefore creditors must not rely on their judgments as affording them any security, or giving them any preference, until they are in possession of their debtor's land.

It is important for purchasers to remember, that the new act has not a retrospective operation, therefore the search must continue to be made for judgments already registered, until they shall be satisfied or become inoperative by effluxion of time from want of re-registration.

The act seems to contemplate, in all cases, delivery of the land in execution—are advowsons, remainders, equities of redemption, and such other interests as, among others, were affected by the 13th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and could not be extended by legal process, touched by this act? In other words, is the section, in effect, wholly repealed? Should such have been the intention of the Legislature, it would have been more satisfactory, if the clause had been repealed in direct terms. If the creditor has still a lien on such interests as cannot be taken in legal execution, he must register under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

I am, Sir,

Yours most obediently,

JAMES PASK,

Registrar's Chief Clerk,
Common Pleas Registry.

THE NEW ORDERS IN CHANCERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—It is somewhat singular that at the time when the Lord Chancellor, in his great and unaffected zeal for law reform, is proposing to enlarge as much as possible the hole and corner jurisdiction at chambers, the following should be the subject which has been selected for the "discours de rentrée" of the Paris Bar:—

"Avantages que presente pour la bonne administration de la justice la publicité la plus étendue des débats et des décisions judiciaires."

They do these things better in France.

Your very obedient servant,

R. E. T. B.

Parliamentary Reports and Papers.

JUDICIAL STATISTICS, 1864.

FROM a large blue book with this heading, numbered 9018, we make the following extracts, giving the round numbers in many cases:—

Number of Police, 1863.

Borough	6471
County	8190
Metropolitan	6590
Dock Yard	743

22,622

The total cost was 1,658,265*l.*, averaging 73*l.* a head.

The police make the following return as to the criminal or vicious classes:—

Known thieves	28,000
Receivers	3,500
Prostitutes	29,000
Suspected	32,000
Vagrants	33,000

Of course, these returns are somewhat speculative, but are made with some care, and ought to be a fair approximation. We are, however, staggered to find a statement, that in London these classes form 1 in 243 of the population, and in what are termed the pleasure towns (Brighton, &c.), 1 in 81; but when we refer to the Report (p. xviii), we find—

Thieves known at large.	Offences.	Apprehended.
Metropolis	2641	14,036
Pleasure towns.	746	790

As a late Queen's counsel was accustomed to say, we suspend our judgment, but no power on earth will persuade us that the thieves in London are so much more active than those in the pleasure towns, as to commit rather more than five offences a-piece, whilst those in the pleasure towns only manage to commit one a-piece. If we suppose that as there were 14,036 offences, there are 14,036 thieves at large in London, we shall probably be more near the truth.

Besides these classes, there were—

In local prisons	18,000
In convict prisons	8,000
In reformatories	3,200
Debtors	623

52,000 crimes were committed, and 30,000 persons apprehended; in the winter quarter there is an excess of one-seventh above the summer quarter.

The persons apprehended before the magistrates were disposed of as follows:—

Discharged	9,300
Committed for trial	19,500

Of those sent to trial, about 16,000 would be convicted.

	Offences.	Apprehended.
Against the person	3,000	3,200
Against property, with violence	5,400	3,000
Malicious	760	780
Other offences	43,000	23,000

Besides those sent to trial, 283,000 persons were summarily convicted before the magistrates. 235,000 men, and 48,000 women. 75,000 of them were committed, 171,000 were fined. Upwards of 45,000 of these committals were for offences which would formerly have been sent to trial.

The convictions under the game laws amount to 9680; for drunkenness, 95,000.

22,757 coroners' inquests were held at a cost of 71,000*l.*

The numbers sent to trial appear to have reached a maximum in 1848, when 30,000 were committed; and a minimum in 1860, when 16,000 were committed; in 1863, the number was 20,000.

The sentences have been as follows:—

Death	29
Penal servitude:
For life	20
Above 10 years	130
3 years	2,900
Imprisonment	12,000
Reformatories	240

The sentence of death was executed in 22 cases.

Only 16 cases came before the Court of Appeal.

The cost of each prosecution is as follows:—

Circuit Assize Courts	£14 0 0
Central Criminal	6 0 0
County Quarter Sessions	8 0 0
Borough Quarter Sessions	6 0 0
Criminal Justice Act	1 0 0

These do not include the Mint cases, or those prosecuted under the direction of the solicitor to the Treasury.

The proportion of persons committed born in—

England	80.0
Scotland	1.8
Ireland	15.0
Foreigners	1.4

35 per cent. could not read or write; only 3.5 per cent. could read and write well; 0.2 had superior instruction.

The average annual cost of each prisoner in the local prisons, including all charges, is 29*l.* The highest, being at Oakham, 102*l.*, and the lowest, at Salford, 15*l.* The total charge is 439,000*l.* The average cost of each convict is 33*l.*, varying from 42*l.* at Dartmoor to 23*l.* at Parkhurst.

The deaths in the convict prisons have been 1 to 110 of men, and to every 71 of women. In 1862 it was only 1 to every 154 of men, and to every 324 of women.

There is a very large increase in the number of prison punishments. In every prison the officers' wages, &c., are equal to, or exceed, the cost of the prisoners' diet and clothes.

Common Law.

The Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer have got through the following amount of business, shewing a slight decrease on the two previous years:—

Writs of summons issued	100,000
“ capias	600
Appearances entered	27,000
Judgments	34,000
Executions	24,000
Motions for new trials	561
Special motions	846
Hand motions	3,180

Trials.

Westminster	1,160
Nisi Prius	959

The amount of fees received on the plea side was 67,500*l.* The total amount recovered was 263,000*l.*

County Courts.

In the county courts—

Total plaints entered	800,000
-----------------------	---------

Causes determined—

With a jury	877
Without a jury	441,428

Total	442,305
-------	---------

Warrants of commitment	28,000
Debtors imprisoned	8,588
Executions against goods	130,000
Sales made	4,000

Total amount claimed by plaints	£1,840,000
Judgments obtained for debts	939,000
“ costs	39,000
Total amount of fees	263,400

There is a slight decrease in each item on the previous year.

Bankruptcy

In the year ending the 11th October, 1862, there were 9663 adjudications of bankruptcy; in the year ending the 11th October, 1863, 8470, 6144 of which were on the petition of the debtor. The gross produce of the bankrupts' estates realised was 700,000*l.* In 996 cases only was there a dividend, in 459 of which it was under 2*s.* 6*d.*; in 20 it was full. The total gross amount of the bills taxed was 94,000*l.* The fees received by the messengers amounted to 35,000*l.*, out of which 27,000*l.* was paid. The total revenue of the court was 124,000*l.*, and total expenditure 119,000*l.*

Chancery.

The total number of causes, &c. disposed of in the year ending the 2nd November, 1863, was 1813, as follows:—

Pleas	9
Demurrers	55
Exceptions	13
Motions for decree	848
Causes	192
Special cases	15

Further considerations	500
Rehearings and appeals	108
Appeal motions	54
Appeal petitions	19

472 of these matters remained to be disposed of.

As, however, the return ends on the 2nd November, the number appearing on the return as remaining to be disposed of, means very little more than the number set down during the Long Vacation. 39 winding-up orders were made, 4000 orders were made on motion or petition, and 6500 on summons in chambers. The fees levied by stamps amounted to 12,900*l.*

The number of days on which the judges sat were—

Lord Chancellor	59
Lords Justices	131
Master of the Rolls	154
Vice-Chancellor Kindersley	162
Vice-Chancellor Stuart	159
Vice-Chancellor Wood	167

There were no sittings by the Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices together.

Summonses in chambers	18,000
Orders made by registrars	6,700
“ in chambers	5,400
Debts proved	£1,953,000
Accounts passed by receivers	594
Receipts therein	£6,637,500
Disbursements	£1,590,200
Sales under Court	594
Amount realised	£1,487,600
Winding-up orders pending	106
Amount of calls made	£473,000
Received on calls	159,000
Assets realised	263,000
Dividends ordered to be paid to creditors	313,000
Amount ordered to be refunded to contributors	32,000
Realised by sales	95,000
Disbursements for expenses in winding up	42,000

338 witnesses were examined before the examiners.

Bills and informations filed	2344
Special cases	18
Administration summonses	430
Other original summonses	285

26,186*l.* was collected by stamps in the Record and Writ Clerks Office.

Of petitions there were—

	Lord Chancellor.	Master of the Rolls.
In causes	654	308
Railways	507	7
Under statutes, and general	843	451

Besides 2900 for orders of course.

The total amount of costs taxed before the Masters was 730,000*l.*

In the Accountant-General's Office.

Paid into court	£17,203,000
Paid out of court	15,673,000

The total number of accounts was 25,000.

The Suitors' Fund appeared to possess 3,898,000*l.* Consols and 17,000*l.* cash.

The accounts of the Suitors' Fee Fund are not very intelligible; the income consisted of 96,000*l.* levied on the suitors, and of interest from the Suitors' Fund and other items, making a total of 162,000*l.*

The payments out of it were:—

Compensations	£ 33,000
Salaries	106,000
Expenses of copying	10,500
Miscellaneous	12,200

£161,700

In the Chancery Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster 149 suits and matters were originated; 132 were heard; 4000*l.* fees were received.

Lunacy.

There were sixty orders of inquiry on commissions.

Receipts by committees and receivers £403,000
Disbursements by ditto 345,000

These receipts and disbursements are exclusive of the cases where the Masters are satisfied as to the due application of the income by explanation.

Admiralty Court.

Causes instituted:—

Salvage	77
Collision	199
Others	209
	<hr/> 485

193 judgments or decrees were made, besides 391 motions and summonses heard; 42,703*l.* was found due; and the costs found due were 17,500*l.*

The Admiralty Court stamps sold were 9100*l.*

The Court sat on 118 days, and the registrar and merchants 23 days.

Divorce Court.

Petitions filed	323
Causes tried:—
On oral evidence	179
On affidavit	—
Before a jury	58
	<hr/> 237

There were four applications for new trials. No appeal to the House of Lords. The total amount of fees is 2508*l.* only. It does not appear whether anything is reserved for stamps.

Probate Court.

In London:—
Probates granted	8496
Administrations	4333
Trials and causes heard	40
Fees in court and contentious business	£1614
In the District Courts:—
Probates	14,268
Administrations	7,800
Probate and Administration Stamps:—

Privy Council.

Appeals lodged in 1863:—
Admiralty Court	23
India	18
Colonies	19
Disposed of	40
Remained for hearing	90

The total costs taxed were 7900*l.*

There were nine applications for extension of patents, of which seven were granted.

House of Lords.

Appeals presented:—

From Exchequer Chamber	5
From Scotland	23
	<hr/> 50

Four cases were withdrawn; seventeen dismissed for want of prosecution; twenty-seven judgments were delivered. In ten, the judgments were affirmed simply; in three, varied; one partly reversed; four reversed simply; and nine reversed with declarations. Thirty-one causes remained for hearing.

GOING TO LAW.—In the year 1863, 100,042 actions were commenced by writ of summons in the superior courts of common law, a number slightly below the average. In 608 other cases actions were allowed to be commenced by writ of capias to hold the defendant to bail. Compared with these numbers, the causes that went to trial were very few. According to the returns made by the officers of the courts, 1162 causes were tried in the three superior courts, which seems to mean, tried in London and Westminster, and 1038 causes were tried at the assizes, numbers differing very little from the average. In the former class of causes the plaintiff had a verdict in 816 cases (but in 10 of them subject to a special case), and 52 were referred in court. At the assizes the plaintiff had a verdict in 660 cases (in 21 subject to a special case), and 93 were referred in court. The sums recovered by verdict amounted to 262,937*l.* Execution was issued in 23,752 cases—a number below the average—including, of course, cases in which the defendant did not put the plaintiff to a trial, but acknowledged the claim.

MR. SERJEANT MEREWETHER.—Mr. Serjeant Merewether, who was for seventeen years town clerk of the corporation of the city of London, has just died at his residence, Castle Field, near Calne, Wiltshire, at the age of eighty-four. During his tenure of office he received an annual stipend of 2000*l.* from the corporation, and after his resignation, in 1859, a pension of 1000*l.*, which now reverts to the civic funds. The deceased was called to the bar in May, 1809, and at the time of his death, as for many years before, held the rank of a Serjeant-at-law, with a Patent of Precedence. He was a Doctor of Civil Law and Attorney-General to the late Queen Dowager. For many years he held the office of Recorder of Reading, and went the Western Circuit. At one time, when he practised much before parliamentary committees, he is said to have realised an income of about 5000*l.* a year. He was elected to the office of town clerk of London in June, 1842, when he was sixty-two years of age, and from thence he relinquished his professional practice, in order to devote himself exclusively to the discharge of his duties. He resigned the office in his seventy-ninth year, from considerations of failing health and advanced age. He was very much respected in the corporation. The deceased had a large family, of whom five still survive, his eldest son being Mr. Henry Merewether, the eminent Queen's Counsel.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 13, 1864.

THE late decision of the House of Lords in the Yelverton case affords an additional illustration of the very inconvenient and irrational practice adopted by their Lordships in delivering the judgment of the House. Of course, the original theory was, that the whole matter was a question brought before the House, on which each member had a right to speak, and which was decided by the vote of the House. But this has long ceased to be the practice, and, we may say, to be the theory either. At present, the House of Lords, in its judicial capacity, is merely the Supreme Court of Appeal, in which the Law Lords are the judges, and, as in every other Court, the decision is that of the majority of the judges. Such being the case, it would be very desirable that the practice of the House should be regulated accordingly, and, amongst other things, should assume the course which is rational and proper for a Supreme Court of Appeal, and, in delivering its judgments, should speak by the mouth of one judge only. This has been the practice in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council—a tribunal which has, we believe, given great satisfaction to those who have had to do with it, except, of course, in questions of divinity, where satisfaction is impossible. The judges there debate the question between themselves, and decide in accordance with the opinions of the majority, one of whom then delivers the judgment of the Court. Now, in the first place, this system has the great advantage of dignity and decorum, and avoids the very unseemly and unjudicial scenes which have sometimes occurred in the House of Lords. We believe that one, at the least, of the noble Lords exhibited considerable feeling in the Yelverton case, and that a noble Lord, in delivering his sentiments, has been known to be so far excited as to shout and strike the table—unpaid judges appearing to feel much more acutely, and to be much stronger partisans, than the paid judges of the realm, who frequently differ in opinion, but are able to deliver their reasons calmly and judicially. In the next place, it is the rational system for a Supreme Court. Where the judges of inferior courts differ, they may very properly deliver their reasons severally, in order that the Supreme Court may, for its own guidance, be able to form an estimate of how far the inferior court was right, and upon what that Court acted. But in a Supreme Court this does not obtain; the decision, whether right or wrong, is final, and the adverse opinions are declared by the highest authority to be erroneous. According to the English system, the judgment of a Court of law has a threefold object: first, to decide the matter in dispute between the parties; secondly, to give such reasons as may satisfy the public, and if possible, the losing party, that he is wrong; and, thirdly, to lay down rules of law for the future. Now, for the first of these objects, the manner of delivering judgment is immaterial; for the second, it is possible that the losing party may derive some small satisfaction from knowing that he was not hopelessly wrong; but this is a very slight matter, and is altogether unimportant as compared with the third, which, to the professional eye, at all events, is the most important of all. The arguments of the minority may be admirable, and in the eye of reason they may be the best, but in the eye of the law they are wrong—settled for ever to be erroneous as applied to facts, or bad as applied to law; and what is the use of propounding bad law? It may be said, that if the decision is wrong logically and in the eye of reason, the publication of the differences among the judges will encourage other suitors in attempts to have the law corrected by future appeals. But the simple answer to this is, that all such speculative attempts to alter the law ought to be discouraged, for in civil matters, at all events, a fixed bad law is better than any uncertain law—one is a rock which a skilful pilot can always avoid being wrecked upon, the other is a shifting sand which may swallow up the most wary; and there can be but little doubt which of these two is the most dangerous and mischievous. The House of Lords is notoriously, and very properly, averse to change, even under the present Lord Chancellor; but if it is to preserve its appellate jurisdiction, it should take every means to exercise that jurisdiction in whatever may be the most perfect and decorous manner, and would do well in this respect to adopt the practice of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Connected with this subject, a somewhat curious speculation as to the value of authority has lately occurred to us, and we believe that a case very similar to our hypothetical case actually occurred before the House of Lords, as to the admissibility of evidence. Suppose that there are three judges, and that the defendant has two independent defences—say that he has pleaded the Statute of Limitations, and has a defence on the merits. Now, it is quite possible that Judge A. may be with the plaintiff on both points; Judge B. with the plaintiff as to the statute, with the defendant as to the merits; Judge C. with the defendant as to the statute, with the plaintiff as to the merits. The result would be, that the decree must be for the defendant, as B. and C. would be against the plaintiff, and yet on each separate point the plaintiff would have two judges to one in his favour. We do not see how this could be avoided, and, as a case of individual hardship, we do not think it very grievous, for the question must have been very doubtful; but what would be the value of this case as an authority? If the judges all delivered their opinions, would it be cited in support of a case like the plaintiff's, or of a case like the defendant's? Even in this case, which may seem to make against our preference for one judgment, we should still prefer the one judgment, as deciding two very doubtful questions, instead of leaving them open for future debate.

APPORTIONMENT.

THE question of apportionment of rents, and other payments on the death of a tenant for life, is of very frequent occurrence, and though simple at first sight, does not always admit of an easy answer. It is proposed briefly to consider the law on this subject, as governed by statutes and recent decisions of courts of equity.

At common law, as is well known, no payments whatever, becoming due after the death of the tenant for life, were apportionable, but the whole, whether arising from real or personal estate, went to the reversioner. Interest on money secured by bond or mortgage formed the only exception to this rule, as it was considered to become due from day to day, although by arrangement it might be made payable half-yearly or otherwise. (Banner v. Lowe, 13 Ves. 134; Edwards v. The Countess of Warwick, 2 P. Wms. 176). In the same manner, the representatives of a lessor could recover nothing in respect of rents accrued but not due under leases which determined with his death, the lessee in this case taking the benefit. (1 Swanst. 338, note). This remarkable anomaly in the law was cured by the stat. 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, sect. 15 of which enacted, that when a tenant for life died before or on the day on which any rent was reserved or made payable upon any demise or lease of lands which determined on his death, his representatives should recover from the under tenants a proportionable part of such rents, or the whole in case he died on the day of payment. The operation of this statute was extended by the 1st section of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, commonly called the Apportionment Act, to every case in which any demise or lease determines on the death of the person making the same, or on the death of the life or lives for which such person was entitled.

The great change in the law on the subject of apportionment was, however, made by the 2nd section of the Apportionment Act, which provides for the apportionment on the death of the person interested, or the determination, by any other means, of the interest of such person, of all payments made payable, or coming due at fixed periods, under any instrument in writing executed, or a will coming into operation after the passing of the act.

The language of the Apportionment Act is so comprehensive, that the doubt has now become what is not, rather than what is, apportionable.

Several important questions have, however, arisen upon the construction of the 2nd section. First, it has been decided that the words "instrument in writing" mean either the instrument creating the periodical payments, or that creating a life interest in them. In Knight v. Boughton (12 Beav. 312), a testator, who died in 1838, gave a life interest in certain parts of his estate to his widow; it was held, that the rents receivable on the next rent-day after the decease of the widow under leases made before the passing of the act, were apportionable. In Plummer v. Whitely (1 Johns. 585; 5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1416), powers of leasing given by a settlement made before the passing of the act had been exercised after the act came into operation; it was held, that rents under these leases were apportionable. (See also Wardrop v. Cutfield, 10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 194).

Again: difficulties have occurred in determining what is a "fixed period," within the meaning of the act.

In Hartley v. Allen (4 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 500), the question of apportionment was raised with respect to shares in the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company. By the deed of settlement of the company, the profits were to be divided rateably amongst the proprietors, to such amount as the directors should from time to time decide upon, and as should be declared at the annual half-yearly meeting; the directors were to cause such dividend to be paid within twenty-one days after it should be declared. It was held, that the dividends were payments becoming due at fixed periods, and were apportionable. And where, by a resolution of the company, the profits and accumulations were to be divided half-yearly, and such half-yearly dividends were to be paid and payable in April and October of each year, it was held, that the dividends were apportionable. But where the time for payment of the dividends depends upon the holding of a general or other meeting, at which the dividends are to be declared, and for which no precise time is fixed, although it may be provided that one or more such meetings shall be held in every year, then the dividends will not be apportionable. (Re Maxwell's Trusts, 1 Hem. & Mil. 610; 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 360). Upon the same principle, royalties reserved in mining leases, and payable when the ore should be procured, are not payments falling due at fixed periods, and therefore are not apportionable. (St. Aubyn v. St. Aubyn, 1 Drew. & S. 611).

The determination of the interest of the person entitled is required by the act. It has been held, that this does not apply to the case of a person absolutely entitled, and, therefore, there will be no apportionment between the heir and personal representative of a tenant in fee. (Brown v. Amyot, 3 Hare, 173). And where there was a devise in trust for W., who was the heir of the testator, for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of W. in tail male, with remainder to the right heirs of the testator, it was held, on the death of W. without issue, that notwithstanding the interposition of an estate tail which might have arisen and prevented the remainder in fee from vesting absolutely, the death of the devisee was not such a determination of his interest as is contemplated by the statute, and that the rents were not apportionable. (Re Chislow's Estates, 3 Kay & J. 689). It would also seem that there will not be apportionment between the representatives and the devisees or legatees of a testator, though the point has not been expressly decided, but payments apportionable independently of the statute would be apportioned. (Re Roger's Trust, 1 Drew. & S. 388; 6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1363). The act, however, applies to all cases in which the interest of the person entitled is determined, whether by death or other means. Thus, where lands had been devised to trustees for a term, upon trust to accumulate the rents, and apply them in payment of debts and legacies and other charges, with remainder to a tenant for life, at the expiration of the term, it was held that the rents were apportionable. (St. Aubyn v. St. Aubyn, 1 Drew. & S. 611).

The 3rd section of the Apportionment Act provides, that it shall not apply to any case in which there is an express stipulation that there shall not be apportionment, or to annual sums payable on policies. But no mere inference can now exclude apportionment; nothing but an express declaration, or language so express that apportionment would be clearly impossible consistent with it, can exclude the operation of the act. (Tyrrell v. Clark, 2 Drew. 86).

It has been decided that interest on railway debentures, inasmuch as it accrues due from day to day, is apportionable independently of the statute. (Re Rogers's Trusts, 1 Drew. & S. 338; 6 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 1363). Annuities determinable on the death of the grantor do not fall within the act, and are not apportionable unless given for the maintenance of infants, or of married women living separate from their husbands. (Leathley v. Trench, 8 Ir. Ch. Rep. 401). Rents reserved on parol demises are, of course, not within the statute, which requires, in every case, an instrument in writing. (In re Markby, 4 My. & C. 484; Cuttle v. Arnold, 1 Johns. & H. 651; 5 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 361).

Rent-charges under the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, and the Copyhold Enfranchisement Act, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, are expressly made within the provisions of the Apportionment Act.

It follows, therefore, that all periodical payments whatsoever, reserved by some written instrument, are apportionable in favour of a person entitled for a limited interest, or his representatives, unless the time for payment be uncertain; and no other payments are apportionable unless they accrue due from day to day (Re Rogers's Trusts, 1 Drew. & S. 338; 6 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 1363), or are annuities granted for the maintenance of infants (Hay v. Palmer, 2 P. Wms. 501), or of married women living separate from their husbands (Howell v. Hanforth, 2 Bl. Rep. 1016), or are rents reserved under parol demises terminating with the interest of the person entitled. (See Kewill v. Davies, 15 Sim. 466.)

On another occasion it is proposed to consider the cases in which courts of equity have decreed apportionment of payments not falling within any of the above rules.

PARTNERSHIP.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The ill success which has attended recent endeavours to amend the law of partnership is much to be regretted. The existing law upon this subject, which, in a commercial country like England, affects the interests of so large a portion of the community, is, perhaps, in a more unsatisfactory state than any other branch of mercantile law. To give a correct answer to the question, what does not constitute a partnership? is a task requiring considerable acquaintance with judicial decisions, as well as a power of clear discrimination. It is, however, a question of continual occurrence, from the frequency of transactions in which a capitalist desires to share the profits of a business, and at the same time to avoid the enormous liabilities which might be involved in its failure, through no fault of his. It is a well-known rule of law, that any arrangement under which a person was to be entitled to an uncertain sum, whether by way of remuneration for personal labour, or as interest upon borrowed capital, which was to depend upon the amount of the gains made in a particular trade or business by another person, constituted the first person a partner with the second, and rendered him liable to the full extent with the second person for all the losses which might be incurred in such trade or business, the only exception appearing to be in favour of servants paid by a certain share of the gross profits. (Dry v. Boswell, 1 Camp. 329). The rule seems to have been founded on decisions of Lord Mansfield, in Young v. Astell (2 H. Bl. 242) and Hoare v. Dawes (1 Dougl. 372), the principal reason given in Hoare v. Dawes being, that "otherwise dormant partners would receive usurious interest without any risk"—a reason which, though valid at that time, has been effectually extinguished by the repeal of the usury laws. The rule met with great favour, and was very firmly established by a series of decisions for many years. Later, however, the current seems to have turned, the decisions tending to run the other way; and the doctrines established by the recent case of Cox v. Hickman (8 H. L. C. 268; 7 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 105) have to some extent remedied the evils of this old doctrine. The facts of that case were briefly these:—Messrs. S., being in difficulties, conveyed all their property to trustees, upon trust to carry on the trade, and to divide the net income between the creditors rateably, such income nevertheless, being deemed the property of Messrs. S. Full powers of management were given to the trustees, and the creditors had power to vary the trusts, and wind up the business. It was held, that the creditors were not liable upon the engagements of the trustees, the ground of the decision being that the trustees were agents, not for the creditors, but for Messrs. S. In the judgments delivered by the Lords in this case it was laid down that the true test in all questions of liability between persons entitled to shares in the profits of any transaction is, whether the persons carrying on the business are agents for those claiming a share in the profits. Where a creditor, in order to secure payment of his debt, joins his debtors in a trading transaction, from the profits of which he is to be paid, then, according to the decision in Kilshaw v. Jukes (9 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 1231), there is no partnership, for the debtors are the persons primarily interested, although, of course, the creditor becomes liable if his name is published to the world. The only question in such cases will therefore be, was the person claiming a share in the profits in the position of principal with respect to the managing partners? In other words, members of a firm being regarded as agents for one another, was the business primarily carried on for the benefit of the person claiming the share of profits as much as for that of the other partners? The question is chiefly important as affecting the interests of dormant partners. There can be no question as to the liability of a dormant partner who claims the right of interference in the partnership concerns, but he would not, it is conceived, be liable if he is not possessed of this right. It may then be asked, how, as the law now stands, can a person possessing capital invest it in any concern (other than a limited company) without incurring the liability of a partner? I submit that the desired end may be accomplished by a stipulation that the advance shall be for a time certain, during which the person lending shall have no power to call in his money or to interfere in the management of the business; in fact, by lending his money as upon a mortgage, and receiving a share of profits instead of a fixed rate of interest. No question of agency can arise in such a case. The lending party may receive a good dividend, or nothing; he may receive back his principal untouched, or he may lose every farthing of it. These are the risks of trade, incident to all speculative transactions. But if my view of the legitimate results of the decision in Cox v. Hickman be correct, he may always rest assured that he knows the worst that can happen to him, and that no unascertained claims, involving perhaps the loss of his whole estate, are hanging over him; and if so, the decision in Cox v. Hickman will have conferred an immense benefit upon the trading community. The time has, however, come when the imperative claims of complicated and ever-increasing commercial relations demand that the law of partnership shall not be left to be gathered from conflicting decisions of courts of law and equity, but shall be laid down by the Legislature in plain and broad terms, intelligible in principle, and of ready application. The mercantile world will do well to intrust the arduous task of bringing about this desired result to the able hands which introduced the bill to amend the law of partnership in the last session of Parliament.

Review.

Handy-Book on Life Assurance Law, for the Use of Policy-holders and Agents, with a Preliminary Statement of some Amendments that are desirable. By ARTHUR SCRATCHLEY, M.A., Barrister-at-Law; formerly Fellow and Sadlerian Lecturer of Queen's College, Cambridge; Actuary to the Western Life Assurance Society, &c. 1864. [Stevens, Sons, & Haynes.]

IN the small compass of thirty-five pages, Mr. Scratchley has digested nearly 200 cases relating to life assurance, and placed them under their respective heads in alphabetical order. Although intended for the non-professional reader, there is little doubt of its proving useful to the lawyer, while its popular element, cheapness, will not be objected to by either party. Mr. Scratchley has in view the amendment of the law, as it bears upon life assurance generally, and has embodied his proposed reforms in the draft of a bill, which we will give entire, and refer the reader to the Handy-Book itself for the author's comments.

A DRAFT OF BILL

For enabling Policies of Life Assurance to be specially secured for the Widow and Children of an Assurer by Nomination, without the Necessity of a Trust Deed, and for rendering Policies of Assurance assignable at Law by simple Indorsement.

Whereas it is expedient to extend the advantages of settlements of policies of assurance on lives to persons who are now unable to enjoy those advantages, by reason of the expense of settlements, and the difficulty of procuring trustees;

And whereas the full development of the advantages of life assurance has hitherto been checked by legal impediments to the assignment of life policies, and it is desirable that such policies should be rendered more valuable as commercial securities, by facilitating their assignment; be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. Any person who, before the passing of this act, has effected or thereafter effects a policy of assurance upon his own life or upon any contingency capable of being lawfully provided for by life assurance, with any society for the assurance of lives established in Great Britain or Ireland, may, by writing under his hand indorsed upon such policy, nominate his then wife, or any one or more of his descendants then living, to receive the moneys payable under such policy, or any part thereof specified in such writing, either severally or as joint tenants, or by way of succession, in the event whereon the same will become payable.

2. Every such writing shall describe the person thereby nominated, if the wife of the nominor, by her Christian name, and if a descendant of the nominor, by his Christian and surname, with the date of his birth.

3. Upon making any such nomination, the nominor shall produce the policy whereon the same is made to any officer of the society liable to pay such policy, authorised to acknowledge nominations on its behalf, and shall at the same time deliver a statement in writing under his hand containing a copy of the nomination, and thereupon an officer shall sign an acknowledgment of such nomination in the form contained in the schedule hereto, and the date of such acknowledgment shall be the date of the nomination hereinafter referred to.

4. The receipt of any person nominated by an indorsement so made and acknowledged, shall be an effectual discharge for the sum payable to him in virtue of such nomination to the society making such payment, against any claim on the part of the executors, administrators, or assignees of the nominor, except in the cases hereinafter provided.

5. A nomination under this act shall be void, and the sum payable thereunder shall form part of the general estate of the nominor:—

- (1). If the nominor becomes bankrupt within twelve calendar months after the date of the nomination;
- (2). If the nominee dies before the nominor, and the nominor does not exercise the right of substitution hereby given.

6. A nomination under this act shall be void as against any assignment of the policy whereby it is secured, or any covenant or trust affecting the same, made or declared before the date of such nomination, and whereof notice has been previously given to the society wherewith such policy is effected.

7. The sum payable on any nomination under this act shall be chargeable with the debts of the nominor existing at the date thereof, if the nominor dies within twelve calendar months after the date of the nomination leaving any such debts then unpaid, and not provided for by his other assets, and if notice thereof is given to the society with which the policy is effected within three calendar months after his decease by his creditors, executors, or administrators.

8. No payment shall be made on a nomination by any person who dies within twelve calendar months after the date thereof, until the expiration of three calendar months after notice of his death has been given to the society with which the policy is effected; and if in this interval the society receives notice of any such debts as aforesaid existing unpaid, it shall retain the moneys due under such nomination until the amount thereof applicable in payment of such debts is established by evidence satisfactory to its directors, or by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, and shall pay over such amount to the executors or administrators of the nominor, or otherwise as such court orders.

9. Subject as aforesaid, the sum included in any nomination, or the surplus thereof after the discharge of any debts affecting the same, shall be duly paid by the society, according to the provisions of the nomination.

10. The legal representatives of a nominee who dies after the happening of the contingency whereon the policy depends, but before payment, shall be entitled to receive and give valid discharges for any sum which would have been payable to the nominee under the nomination if he had been alive.

11. Nominations made under this act cannot be revoked in favour of the nominor, but, in the case of the death of any nominee, the nominor may substitute in place of the nominee so dying any other person whom, under the provisions hereof, he might then originally nominate; and in the case of nominations in favour of descendants, the nominor may, from time to time, substitute or add the names of any other such descendants as the nominees solely or jointly with the descendants previously nominated, of the moneys affected by such nomination, so that all such substitutions or additions be made in like manner as original nominations.

12. The payment of premiums due upon a policy subject to a nomination under this act, by any person other than the nominor, shall not affect the rights of any nominee to the moneys thereby secured, and such rights shall be incapable of assignment either at law or in equity before the happening of the contingency whereby they become vested, unless in the case next following.

13. If a nominor become bankrupt after the expiration of twelve calendar months from the date of the nomination, the society, by which the policy is payable, may at any time thereafter accept the surrender of the policy, by the nominee if of full age, or by his guardian, and pay to him, or rateably between the nominees if more than one, the saleable value of such policy, or if the nomination does not extend to the whole of the moneys secured thereby, then a proportionate part thereof.

14. If the power of nomination hereby given has been exercised as to part only of the sum secured by any policy, the society by which the same is payable may, at any time, accept a surrender of such proportion of the said sum as is not included in the nomination, and may cancel such policy by issuing a new policy at the same rates of premium for the proportion thereof so included, subject to a like nomination in favour of the parties entitled under the nomination so cancelled.

15. In any nomination made under this act there may be inserted, with the consent of the society by which the policy securing the same is payable, testified as its regulations require, a provision that, if any nominee should be under the age of twenty-one years at the happening of the contingency whereon the sum assured becomes payable, the society liable for such policy shall retain the sum to which such nominee is entitled until he attains such age, or until his death under it, allowing interest thereon at such rate, and payable in such manner, as is stated in such provision; and all such provisions shall be binding upon the society and the nominees respectively.

16. In a nomination carrying interest, the nominor may, by a declaration inserted therein, make the receipt of any nominee at any age not under fourteen years a good discharge for such interest, and where no other provision is made by the nominor for the payment of the interest due to any nominee during his infancy, the same shall be payable, as it accrues, to his lawful guardian, whose receipt shall be a good discharge therefrom.

17. Every assurance society which admits the death of any person upon whose life a policy of assurance affected by a nomination under this act depends, shall, within one calendar month thereafter, give notice of such admission to the Commissioners of the Inland Revenue; and shall, out of the sum payable on such nomination, retain an amount sufficient, in the judgment of its directors, to provide for the probate and legacy duty assessable thereon under the provisions of this act, and shall not part with the amount so retained, or any part thereof, until such duties are paid, except in payment of such duties; and if any such society make any payment in contravention of this provision, it shall be liable, at the suit of the said commissioners, to pay double the sum chargeable for such duties.

18. For the purpose of ascertaining the sum chargeable as last aforesaid, the Commissioners of the Inland Revenue shall, upon the application of any nominee under this act, assess the amount which would be payable for probate and legacy duty upon the sum secured to him by the nomination if such sum constituted the whole estate of the nominor chargeable with such duties, and shall issue to him a certificate of the amount so assessed in such form as they from time to time direct.

19. Any society for the assurance of lives established in Great Britain or Ireland, may authorise any of its officers in case an assignment, duly stamped, of any policy for which such society is liable, is produced to him, together with the policy and a statement in writing containing the names and descriptions of the assignor and assignee, and the date of the assignment, to indorse thereon under his hand an acknowledgment of such assignment.

20. Such an assignment as last aforesaid may be made by an indorsement duly stamped on the policy assigned, in the form of assignment contained in the schedule hereto, which shall vest in the assignee all the rights, legal or equitable, of the assignor in such policy at the date hereof, and may be stamped by affixing stamps thereto in like manner as to policies of assurance.

21. An assignment of any policy not indorsed upon the policy, shall be acknowledged in the first form of acknowledgment contained in the schedule hereto; and an assignment thereof so indorsed shall be acknowledged in the second form of acknowledgment so contained.

22. From the date of any such acknowledgment, the assignee therein mentioned or referred to, his executors or administrators, may sue on the policy assigned, and give effectual discharges for any moneys payable thereunder, and not comprised in any nomination made under the power hereby given, without joinder of the executors or administrators of the assurer.

23. The statements hereby required to be delivered on the acknowledgment of any nomination or assignment, shall be the property of the society on behalf of which the acknowledgment is made, which may charge for such any acknowledgment a fee not exceeding 5s.

24. This act may be cited as "The Life Assurance Act, 18—."

NINE-TENTHS of the Total Profits are divided among the Assured. Considerably more than one-tenth of the Profits is derived from Policies which do not participate in the Profits, so that THE ASSURED HAVE LARGER BONUSES THAN IF THEY FORMED A MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY, and received the whole of the Profits derived from their own Policies.

The last BONUS averaged about SIXTY PER CENT. on the Premiums paid, and TWO PER CENT. PER ANNUM on the Sums assured.

The EXPENSES of Management are less than FIVE PER CENT. on the Income.

The PREMIUMS are calculated for every half-year of age.

The Policies of this Society, in the hands of third parties, are not vitiated by SUICIDE, or by the Life assured proceeding beyond the limit allowed.

NOTICES of ASSIGNMENT of Policies registered and acknowledged free of charge. Printed Forms for such Notices furnished when required. The usual Commission allowed to Solicitors introducing Insurances, the Commission being continued to the person originally entitled to it as long as the Policy remains in force, through whatever channel the Premium may be paid.

LOANS granted on the Society's Policies, on Reversions, Life Interests, and other approved Security.

The Annual Reports and full Statements of Account are regularly printed, and may be obtained on application.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 20, 1864.

THE case of Bale v. Cleland and Others, which came on for trial at the last Guildford Assizes, and was arranged between the parties on the third day of the trial, should afford instruction and warning to the promoters, directors, and shareholders of joint-stock companies. We have no intention of discussing the conduct of the defendants in this particular case, and are quite ready to assume that there was no fraudulent intention on their part, and that the arrangement made between them and the plaintiff was a matter of mutual concession; but although the charge of fraud was withdrawn, it is clear that there was a breach of duty on the part of the directors, and, therefore, that the facts which constituted that breach of duty should be carefully weighed and considered by others who are in the same position. Now, it appeared upon the evidence given at the trial, that the directors had issued a prospectus and a balance-sheet, on the faith of which the plaintiff applied for and paid for his shares. There was a contention between the parties as to the reasonable construction of the prospectus, the plaintiff contending that it represented the actual business which had been done by the company, the defendants, on the other hand, contending that it represented what the company's works were capable of doing, and might be fairly expected to realise. After considering the prospectus, which was set out in the public prints, we must think that any reasonable man would have put the plaintiff's construction upon it, and, therefore, that he was justified in believing that it represented the work which had actually been done; thus, the prospectus amounted to a misrepresentation, and if the case had gone to the jury, the question would have been, whether the defendants knew it was a misrepresentation. We think it may be taken for granted that the jury would have found against the defendants, for they would naturally have the strong impression that persons who publish these documents ought to know, and must be taken to know, whether they are true or false. So far, therefore, as the prospectus is concerned, the case is a warning to directors to state truly and accurately in such a document, all those facts which are put forward, with the view of explaining the real state of the company's affairs, and to use language, the fair meaning of which cannot be open to doubt and discussion.

The other document, on the inaccuracy of which the plaintiff relied, was the balance-sheet sent to the shareholders shortly before the yearly general meeting. It appeared that the auditors differed as to the principle upon which the balance-sheet should be drawn up: according to the opinion of one, it ought to shew a loss, according to that of the other, it ought to shew a profit. No doubt, other graver charges were introduced into the case, but as the charge of fraud was abandoned, we shall consider that there was a bona fide difference of opinion between the auditors. At the meeting of the shareholders the difference of opinion was fully explained, and the two balance-sheets put before them; and the directors stated to the shareholders that it was entirely for them to decide what balance-sheet they would adopt, and whether a dividend should be declared. The shareholders, not unnaturally, believed the balance-sheet which shewed a profit, and accordingly declared a dividend. The plaintiff swore, that on the faith of this dividend and the prospectus, he took his shares.

Now, the Joint-stock Companies Act, under which the company was formed (19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, table B.), contains the following direction as to dividends:—

"The directors may, with the sanction of the company in general meeting, declare a dividend to be paid to the shareholders in proportion to their shares.

"No dividends shall be payable except out of the profits arising from the business of the company."

Now, these provisions shew—first, that it is the directors who are to declare a dividend, and that they cannot escape responsibility by leaving the matter entirely in the discretion of the shareholders; and, secondly, that they ought to be quite satisfied that there are profits out of which to declare it; and that if, as in the case of Bale v. Cleland, there is a substantial difference of opinion on the point, they ought not to declare a dividend. In Bale v. Cleland it appeared that the directors themselves differed in opinion as to the propriety of declaring one; and it is clear that the shareholders could form no satisfactory opinion unless all the accounts were before them, and they had had ample time to look into the matter. At all events, a committee of shareholders should have been appointed to examine the books, and hear the statements of the auditors before they pronounced their decision. Baron Martin, at the close of the case, expressed himself in the following strong and judicious observations on the point:—"I wish to make a few observations. I do not desire to make any comments on the case, but I desire it to be distinctly understood that I do not concur in certain of the observations which have been made by the defendants' counsel. I see a great many of these companies in course of formation, and I strongly recommend persons disposed to take shares in them to read carefully the report of the proceedings of this trial. In the second place, I desire to say that the law directs that the directors may, with the sanction of the company in general meeting, declare a dividend to be paid to the shareholders in proportion to their shares, and that no dividend shall be payable except out of the profits arising from the business of the company, and, therefore, it is the bounden duty of the directors (indeed, I do not believe that the shareholders could legally make a dividend, for it is the directors who are to make it), it is the bounden duty of the directors, when they declare a dividend, not to pay it, except out of profits; and if a dividend is declared otherwise than out of profits, it is their duty to resist it and refuse to pay it, and, if necessary, to appeal to the Court of Chancery to restrain its payment."

Another point which should be noticed by directors of companies is, that Mr. Bale was not a shareholder when he saw the prospectus and balance-sheet, and that those documents, especially the latter, were intended for shareholders; but any doubt as to this fact not relieving directors from liability, has already been removed by the case of Scott v. Dixon (29 L. J., Ex., 62, note), a case very similar to that of Bale v. Cleland, where the question was raised, and where Lord Campbell thus expresses himself:—"The next point which we have to consider is, was the representation made to the plaintiffs? Upon that I cannot entertain the slightest doubt. Report of joint-stock companies, though addressed to the shareholders, are generally meant for the information of all who are likely to have dealings with the company, and I have no doubt that the directors in the present case knew that this particular report would, a few hours after its publication, be in the hands of all shareholders in Liverpool, and that it would be acted upon by those who wished to have dealings with the bank. But, moreover, we have positive evidence here that it was to be bought by any person who wished to become a purchaser of shares, and it thus came into the hands of the plaintiffs; and the plaintiffs, by the perusal of it, were induced to buy shares."

It is thus clear that any one of the public who sees these documents, and take shares upon the faith of them, has a claim upon the directors, if he is injured by their containing false statements, to the knowledge of the directors.

Another warning which the case of Bale v. Cleland holds out is, that gentlemen of fortune who become directors without the intention of making themselves acquainted with the condition of the company or the proceedings of the acting directors, incur a great risk. It is true, that in Bale v. Cleland the counsel for the plaintiff gave up the case as to three of the defendants, who were men of fortune, and had taken no active part. After reading all the evidence, we most doubt whether the judge or jury would have been of this opinion. Such gentlemen lend the weight of their names and character to the company; they have the means of knowing the truth or falsity of any statements which are published by the other directors, and they cannot and ought not to escape responsibility by not using those means of knowledge.

In conclusion, we most earnestly, in the words of Baron Martin, recommend persons disposed to take shares in joint-stock companies to read carefully the report of the trial of Bale v. Cleland.

APPORTIONMENT.

THERE are various cases in which courts of equity decree apportionment of payments not falling within the common-law rules or the statutory provisions, as, for example, where a certain aggregate sum is paid in lieu of or by way of composition for periodical payments. When a composition in respect of periodical payments, some of which accrued due before the death of a tenant for life, is received by the reversioner or person entitled in succession, it will be apportioned according to the time which has elapsed since the death of the tenant for life. Thus, in the case of Agnesley v. Wordsworth (2 Ves. & B. 331), a composition in lieu of tithes was received after the death of the incumbent by the successor; it was decreed that the payment should be apportioned between the successor and the representatives of the incumbent, according to the respective periods of their enjoyment of the benefice. See also Oldham v. Hubbard (2 Y. & C. C. C. 209), in which Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce expressed an opinion that a composition for tithes is within the Apportionment Acts of Geo. 2 and Will. 4. Where leaseholds in settlement were taken by a railway company, and the purchase money paid into court, the purchase money was divided according to the number of years in the term unexpired at the time when the company took the lands, and a portion corresponding to the number of years that the tenant for life held, was paid to his representatives, and the residue to those entitled in remainder. (Re Money's Trusts, 2 Drew. & S. 94). But if the time during which the payments accrued is uncertain, it would appear that there will be no apportionment. Thus, in Hartley v. Allen (4 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 500) a dividend, declared shortly after the death of a tenant for life, was apportioned, but it was held, that a bonus, though payable at the same time with the dividend, could not be apportioned. It is conceived that the decision was grounded upon the fact, that in the case of the bonus there was nothing to shew that it had not been declared in respect of profits made since the death of the tenant for life.

There is a very numerous class of cases where contribution is sought from the reversioner towards payments made by the tenant for life, for the benefit of or in discharge of both. Thus, when leaseholds or copyholds are settled, and no provision is made for the expense of renewal, if the tenant for life renews, he will have a lien upon the estate in the hands of the reversioner for a portion of the expense corresponding to the number of years of the renewed term, of which he has not had the enjoyment. If the remainderman renews, he may require the tenant for life to give security for the amount which, at the determination of the life interest, shall appear to be his due proportion of the fine. (Jones v. Jones, 5 Har. 440). The rule is the same for legal and equitable estates. (Carter v. Sebright, 26 Beav. 374). As the amount to be borne by each is to be determined in proportion to their actual enjoyment of the estate, and not in proportion to an extent of enjoyment to be determined speculatively, or by a calculation of probabilities, there can be no apportionment till the death of the tenant for life. (Harris v. Harris, 10 Weekly Rep. 826; S. C., 12 Weekly Rep. 451).

The rule that burdens, to which several persons are jointly liable, shall be adjusted between them, may be regarded as an application of the old maxim, that equality is equity. Thus, where one of several co-sureties discharges the debt, he may exact contribution from the others (Dering v. The Earl of Winchelsea, 1 Wh. & Tud. L. C., Eq., 78); and where an estate subject to a rent-charge, is sold in parcels, the purchasers must, in the absence of any stipulation, contribute rateably to the rent, and if an undue proportion be paid by one, he may recover the excess from the rest. (Cary's Rep. 3).

There is an exception to this rule in cases where the payment towards which contribution is sought, was made in a matter arising ex delicto. On the principle that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands, the Courts refuse to interfere where a liability which has arisen from the wrongful act of several parties, has been discharged by one of them. Each of the parties at fault, is in such a case, liable at law for the whole consequences of their joint act, and equity will give no relief by apportioning the losses between them. (The Attorney-General v. Wilson, Cr. & Ph. 1; and see Lingard v. Bromley, 1 Ves. & B. 117; and Siddons v. Connell, 10 Sim. 86).

The subject of contribution in equity is fully discussed in a learned note to Averall v. Wade (Lloyd & G., temp. Segd., 252, 264), where many cases on the subject are collected, and to which reference is made for further illustrations of the principles stated above.

COPY OF LORD ST. LEONARDS' ANSWER TO THE CIRCULAR ISSUED BY THE BAR COMMITTEE, ON LAW REPORTING.

THE present scheme of reporting has the advantage of furnishing the profession with an immediate report of every case of any importance, with, no doubt, the unavoidable drawback of the want of time for the reporter to obtain the briefs and papers in the cases, and to give them that study and deliberation which the subject demands; but this is supplied by the regular reporter, to whom ample time is allowed, and from whom an accurate and condensed statement of facts is required. Open to objection as the scheme may be, the bar, I think, would not be willing to lose either the earlier or the later reporter. There is such a demand for the last authority, that now and then it is not the greatest lawyer, but the one who has read up the latest cases who proves the best advocate.

By our law, every decision after a regular argument is an authority, for our decisions are not like those of the French, good only for the successful party, but they operate as precedents, and will, unless erroneous, be followed. This system works admirably, although, of course, there will always be judgments open to objection.

I have not experienced any difficulty in consequence of differences between the reports. The weekly ones, which are ably conducted, would not be relied upon in an important case, if any doubt arose about the facts, but the briefs in such recent cases could always be readily obtained, and the facts be ascertained before publication of the report in full.

I should think it objectionable to call for legislative interference, or to attempt to place reporters under the Government, or to appoint short-hand writers. You can no longer prohibit, or control by the strong hand, reporting. Every man is and must be left at liberty to go into court and report what he pleases. The newspaper press has, and will continue to have, that privilege. No judge could properly refuse to hear a case quoted by the bar, but a judge would not, upon a law point, allow a newspaper report to be quoted, nor would he act upon an important decision quoted from a report hastily published; without further examination. When the regular report is published, after the reporter has had full time to obtain and read the briefs, and to consider the facts, the Court can safely act, for if there be any error in such a report, it is quickly detected.

We have excellent materials to proceed upon. There are, perhaps, too many weekly reporters, but not too many of those I term the regular reports. The first you cannot interfere with further than this, that the Court may, and the authority has frequently been exercised, refuse to allow a weekly reporter to be quoted, when the case is published in the regular report. If the former are or should become too numerous, that is an evil which should be left to cure itself. Unless the sale is satisfactory, the publication will necessarily cease. One evil of numerous reporters is, that cases, however unimportant, are reported, for every reporter is naturally desirous to secure the insertion of his own report of a case which will not be found in any of the other reports.

But the regular reports are no doubt open to some objection. Many cases depending upon local acts, which are not likely ever again to come into discussion, are reported at great length; so cases, for example, depending upon the construction of a long correspondence, can hardly be usefully reported, unless the judge lays down or explains a rule of law. It would be useless to multiply instances. A judge may with great propriety go at large into an examination of the facts, for the satisfaction of the suitor, which it may not be necessary to report at length, although, no doubt, the Court frequently, in its own view of the facts, clears up half the difficulties in the case. It is impossible not to be struck with the learning and labour exhibited by our judges in their judgments; but the length now and then is greater than the case, as a legal authority, would justify the reporter in fully reporting.

But these things can be easily corrected, and it would be desirable that one uniform plan of printing should be adopted. No number should close with part of a case; such a mode of reporting gives the student and the practitioner additional trouble, and has the appearance of an attempt to compel the purchaser of the mutilated report to purchase the next number, and so through the series.

Some of the regular reporters have felt themselves at liberty to leave portions of their earlier cases unreported for a considerable time, whilst they report the current cases. This is, of course, open to serious objections.

Law reports have always been costly, but until of late years they were of considerable value when on our shelves. Now, however, the booksellers have so managed, that after the lawyer has half bound his reports, he finds their value in his hands not largely exceeding the cost of the binding. There should, therefore, be no reports of unnecessary length, or of points not of importance. With the bookseller it is, of course, merely a trade transaction, so that the reporters may, in carrying out their improvements, require, in some measure, the support of the bar and the bench. The profession owe a debt of gratitude to those members of the bar who, with knowledge, ability, and labour, dedicate themselves to reporting; and in dispensing legal patronage, long-continued labours of a reporter should not be overlooked.

Although I am opposed to legislative authority or an undue control over reporters, yet I think much may be done by the bench and the bar to place reporting on a more satisfactory footing. The judges cannot be required to write their judgments; that must be left to their own discretion. Where the judge corrects the report of his judgments, he would, of course, avoid altering the sense of what fell from him, and he should not detain the MS. an hour longer than necessary, for that would tend to delay the publication, and thus an impediment would be caused by the bench itself in the accomplishment of the object in view. The reporter should not be under or subject to the judge, but he should be in confidential communication with the judge. There has always, in my time, been an acknowledged reporter, that is, a reporter in whom the judge reposed confidence, and to whom he allowed a copy of his written judgments to be furnished, and in many instances the judge corrected the MS. report. This operated as a check upon rival reporters in the same court; but if I recollect rightly, Lord Denman, when chief justice, broke through the rule; and whilst there were rival reporters in the King's Bench, allowed both to have copies of the written judgments. It is not probable that there will hereafter be more than one report of the proceedings of each Court. Although the judge has no power to appoint a reporter, he has necessarily considerable influence over the assumption of the office by any gentleman at the bar. There is no want of competent persons to fill the office, but no man could hope to succeed who did not possess the confidence of both the judge and the bar, and no bookseller would undertake the publishing the reports unless he were satisfied that the reporter did possess that confidence. I believe that what is now passing will go far to correct any solid objection to the present mode of reporting; and as the bar has taken up the subject with general approbation, I would beg to suggest, that besides the report, which I presume the committee will make embodying their views, the bar should establish from their own body a permanent committee, a sort of family council, with power to add new members as occasion may require, whose duty it should be to keep a friendly eye over the reports, and to suggest such improvements as may in their judgments be required, and to communicate with the bench and the reporters thereon, and, if it should be deemed necessary, to call a general meeting of the bar. The simple appointment of such a body would in all probability prevent any irregularity in the reporting of the judicial decisions. If any occurred they could speedily be corrected; and it would be understood that this power, if I may so term it, would be so exercised as in no respect to wound the feelings of the highly honourable and learned class of our brethren at the bar, who dedicate their time to reporting the decisions of our Courts.

I may observe, that I consider any attempt to purchase the interests in any existing reports altogether inadmissible, nor do I think that any satisfactory arrangement is likely to be made between the large body of the reporters in the various Courts.

Connected with this subject there are two important questions upon which the opinion of the bar must have great influence. 1. What are we to do with the reports already published? 2. What are we to do with the future reports after their publication? My answer to both these questions would be, do nothing, but leave both classes to be sold to all desirous of purchasing.

1. As to the first class, I should consider it a waste of time and money to touch them. No good law library is without them, and although at one time they were dear, yet now they are cheap, and a sufficient stock is always in the market. To republish them as they are would cost a very large sum; no bookseller would undertake it, and it would be a waste of public money. Any man who wants an old report which is not on his own shelves, is sure to find it in the library of his inn. If an attempt were made to curtail and consolidate these reports, it would be an expensive and a useless labour. No bookseller would undertake any such publication, and who, having already the old reports at large with all the arguments, would buy the curtailed edition? Speaking for myself, I have constantly found the arguments in the old reports a great help to me during my long career. Who would venture to condense Coke or Plowden, for example? Besides, if we require condensation, can we hope to excel Chief Baron Comyns; or, if we look for an enlarged view, can we compete with Chief Baron Gilbert (part of Bacon's Abr.); whilst, if we call for an abridgement, have we not Viner's, in 24 folio volumes, besides a modern Appendix of 6 octavo volumes, and other works of great merit. And, not to be serious for a moment, if we prefer verse to prose, we have all Coke's reports condensed in verse, e. g.

Archer,—If he for life enfeoff in fee,
It bars remainders in contingency.

2. As to the suggestion, that periodically the future reports should be consolidated and corrected, we must bear in mind that we shall at a large cost already have the reports themselves on our shelves, and, as I have already reminded you, of little pecuniary value relatively to their cost. A mere republication of the reports under separate heads would be very expensive, and would not sell; and if you desire to go further, to whom would you intrust the important task of omitting this case and throwing doubts upon that? Where is the man to be found? And by what power is such an authority to be granted? For, unless it be stamped with authority, it would simply rank amongst the legal publications of the day; and, even if made authority, the bar would be at perfect liberty to resort when necessary to the original report, and perhaps damage the improved version of it. A code of law founded on the reports every five or six years would be no benefit. In truth, in the many excellent treatises which, at least in sufficient numbers, now issue from the press, we have upon all important subjects codes and codes, resting altogether on the knowledge and labour of their authors. They are not law, but they undertake to consolidate and explain the law upon the particular subjects which they discuss, and for which purpose all the reports, ancient as well as modern, are resorted to. Such treatises, with such corrections as the Legislature only can make, and which can seldom be well directed, unless a comprehensive view can be readily taken of the whole subject, tend to place the law on a just foundation. The authorities are not likely to harmonise unless they are collected and the entire subject considered. It is then that the discrepancies and departures from principle are for the first time observed. In such works discussion, and, it may be, respectful disapprobation, may be allowed, for their observations can only become law by force of their own weight, which may lead to their adoption by the learned judges. Happily they are not law, but such works have more than the advantages which can be offered by an authorised code, which is to be binding upon as law. It would seem to be wise, therefore, not to attempt to condense, correct, and consolidate the reports, ancient or modern.

ST. LEONARD.

THE NEW CIVIL CODE FOR INDIA.

(From the Saturday Review.)

A SMALL beginning of a very great work—a work which, if completed and carried out with foresight and ability, will do more than any other one thing, to make British rule a blessing to India—has been made by the publication of the first Report of the Commission appointed to prepare a body of substantive law for India. The commissioners at present only attempt to frame a body of civil law for persons not belonging to the Mahomedan or Hindoo religion. They do not venture to alter the rules of descent under which the forefathers of the vast majority of the inhabitants of India held and transmitted land while Britain was still an island undiscovered by civilised man. They do not even shake the edifice of more modern subtleties, complicated by an imperfect system of arithmetical notation which has been built up by the patient but narrow genius of Mahomedan lawyers. The laws of his fathers are still to be the laws of the ryot, and the owner of a vested share in a Mahomedan inheritance will still have to arrive at the simple result he desires by calculating what is the two-thousandth or three-thousandth part of a purely artificial total. It is for Armenians and Parsees, for the descendants of Europeans, and far Europeans settled in India, that the new laws are to be framed. They most want a law, for they have no law at present. The barbarous and accidental character of English law and English legislation could scarcely be better illustrated than by the fact that these persons are theoretically supposed to be under the common law of England as it stood a hundred years ago; or, if they are remote from the regions where a knowledge of English law is professed, they are subject to the decision of judges, whose best quality is their frank honesty; and who profess to be guided by nothing better than the wavering light of their own good sense. The commissioners have had to consider how far the principles of English law in each branch of the civil code is applicable to persons placed as these outlying inhabitants of India are placed, and then how far these principles are in themselves capable of improvement. If their task is well performed, and if the civil code, when in operation, is administered by able and competent judges, the great hope for the future which the commissioners express may be realised, and the Hindoos and Mahomedans may be willing to make the new law their law, and so there will be only one legal system throughout British India. No instrument of education and of civilisation after the European pattern could be more efficacious than a uniform code of law, and none could be more certain to mould the thoughts of all the natives of India into a patient and contented acceptance of British rule. It is impossible also that the success of an Indian civil code should not in time modify profoundly the existing law of England. Rules of law to which tradition and custom make us now adhere with a blind reverence will appear in a very different light when they have first been stigmatised by persons of high legal eminence as being in themselves useless or hurtful, and when they have subsequently been shewn to be needless by the practical experience of India.

The branch of law which the commissioners have begun comprises the rules of succession and inheritance. They have not judged it advisable that the rules for the devolution of moveable property should be, as in England, different from the rules for the devolution of immoveable property. The English, they observe, who hold land in India, look upon it as a temporary investment, and none of the other inhabitants of India recognise the distinction with which feudal law has made us familiar. The interests of women are to be better protected than in England. It is proposed that the husband shall not acquire by the mere fact of marriage any interest in his wife's property during her life, but that she shall continue to possess the same rights with reference to it as if she were unmarried, and shall have full power to dispose of it by will. When the commissioners proceed to notice some of the more intricate details of the law of succession, they propose variations from the English law which shew how objectionable they think the English law of testate and intestate succession in many respects, and how far it has been made to depart from that which they say has been their aim—the giving effect to the plain meaning of the words of the testator, without endeavouring to do or say for him that which he has not done or said for himself. On the subject of conditions, for example, they say that they have considered it right to abstain from introducing into India the very refined distinctions which the Court of Chancery has, in questions relating to personal property, borrowed from the Ecclesiastical Courts. It sounds like a gentle ridicule of Chancery law when they go on to explain their meaning, and to add that they think the words of a will ought to be adhered to where no condition inconsistent with law or morality is sought to be imposed; that all bequests made upon illegal, immoral, or impossible conditions, should be void; and that wherever the testator's wishes can be carried into effect if expressed in one way, they ought to be permitted to take effect if expressed in another way. The commissioners have also introduced a valuable reform in the complicated and uncertain rules governing the acquisition of domicile, by providing that no one shall acquire a domicile in India by residing there as a soldier in the Queen's service, or in the discharge of any public office, or in the exercise of any profession or calling. This, with regard to the bulk of the army, is only stating the law as it stands; but it will prevent the official and professional classes, and the officers of the staff corps, from acquiring, as they may do now, an Indian domicile, often without their knowledge, or even against their will. But a means is provided by which any one distinctly wishing for an Indian domicile may acquire one, and thus all uncertainty will be avoided, and every one will know whether he has an Indian domicile or not.

The masterly code of criminal law which India owes mainly to Lord Macaulay supplied the commissioners with many admirable hints for working out the details of their scheme. More especially, they have borrowed from it the ingenious machinery by which it is sought to obviate the danger of the code being rendered useless by the interpretations of judges. This machinery consists of two parts. In the first place, each provision of the code is accompanied by illustrations. Cases are put in which the clause of the code is applied, and it is shewn how such a case is to be decided. The framers of the penal code explained that it was their object to select examples which shewed how far the words of the clause could be carried—cases which, so to speak, strained the words of the clause to their just limit, and thus gave a measure of their capacity. An obvious instance would illustrate nothing, for it would solve no doubts; an instance seemingly beyond the words of the code would only cast doubts on the value of the language used. The really instructive illustration is an illustration which anticipates the classes of cases which judges would be likely to find difficult, and then shews what is the decision that ought to be given. This difficult task was fulfilled with the greatest ability and judgment in the construction of the penal code, and the framers of the civil code have not only adopted the same method, but have laid down, that the cases taken as illustrations shall be binding as law on the judges if they arise. This might seem a useless provision; for it is impossible to suppose that, if the precise case anticipated arose, a judge would venture to decide it in a manner different from that in which the framers of the code had themselves decided it. But the absolute legal value given in the civil code to these illustrations is really connected not so much with the illustrations themselves as with the part they are to play in the gradual improvement of the law. The commissioners are determined, if possible, to save India the burthen of having piles of judicial decisions overlaying the words of the code. So they adopt the second part of the machinery invented by the authors of the penal code, and provide that every judge of any but the lowest rank shall report to his official superiors every doubt he may entertain as to any question of construction; and the statement of these doubts, together with every decision conflicting with the decision of another judge, are to be reported on, and the reports sent home to the Secretary of State for India, and laid before his legal advisers, who will see how far the code ought to be altered, and, still more, what additional or substitutive illustrations ought to be made. Instead, therefore, of new law being made by judges in India, it will be made by the legislative power, in the shape of a new illustration. This use of illustrations to embody the essence of all the legal subtleties and difficulties which practical experience may have suggested to judges, is one of the greatest triumphs of the new legislation for India; and if the whole system is as well framed and worked as there is reason to hope it will be, India will probably have in a few years one of the very best legal systems that the world has ever seen.

THE CONSOLIDATED GENERAL ORDERS of the HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY; with Regulations as to certain Fees and Charges.

"The new arrangement of the Orders leaves nothing to be wished for: it is clear, convenient, and admirably adapted for the purposes of practice. Although the language of the old Orders has been adhered to as far as possible, it has been altered whenever it was found necessary for the purpose of adapting them to the present practice, and also for the purpose of removing those doubts and difficulties which so frequently arose under the old Orders."—Jurist, Jan. 21, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 27, 1864.

THE case of Bramwell v. Eglinton, lately decided by the Queen's Bench, and reported 10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 583, has not, we think, attracted the attention it deserves. The main point of the decision may be shortly stated to be, that the title of the assignees of a pauper bankrupt, who has been a prisoner for debt, relates back to the first day of his imprisonment; and we propose to consider whether this decision was correct, and if correct, whether the clauses of the new Bankruptcy Act, on which it professes to be founded, are the result of inadvertence on the part of its framers, or indicate on their part an intentional retrogression from the principles on which bankruptcy legislation has been administered on this subject for many years. It will, therefore, be convenient to glance shortly at the history and progress of this branch of the law, and to ascertain how it stood at the time of the passing of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861. The relation of the title of assignees in bankruptcy back to the act of bankruptcy, although necessary, had been formerly supposed to operate with so much harshness as to require mitigation or modification in particular instances.

The doctrine of relation was itself a creature of statute, as is shewn by Lord Mansfield in Cooper v. Chitty (1 Burr. 31). "This relation," he says, "the statutes concerning bankrupts introduced to avoid frauds. They vest in the assignees all the property that the bankrupt had at the time of what I may call the crime committed (for the old statutes consider him as a criminal), they make the sale by the commissioners good against all persons who claim by, from, or under the bankrupt, after the act of bankruptcy, and against all executions not served and executed before the act of bankruptcy." But the 1 Jac. 1, c. 15, rendered valid the payment of debts due to the bankrupt without knowledge that he was bankrupt; the 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, sales by the bankrupt more than five years before the commission; the 19 Geo. 2, c. 32, payments by the bankrupt in the ordinary course of trade, without notice of bankruptcy on the part of the receivers. By the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, ss. 81, 82, 84, 86, 108; by the 2 Vict. c. 11, s. 12, and particularly by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, further important concessions were made in favour of creditors dealing with secret bankrupts, which may be said to have been substantially re-enacted in the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ss. 133, 134. It will be enough for our present purpose to state that, by these last-named sections, all transactions by and with any bankrupt, bonâ fide entered into before the date of the filing of the petition, are protected, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy, provided the person dealing with the bankrupt has no notice of any such prior act. And this protection would apply to a retaking by the real owner of goods left, with his consent, in the apparent ownership of the bankrupt, without notice of any act of bankruptcy. Moreover, under the same statute (sect. 69), the title of assignees of a bankrupt who had been a prisoner for debt related back, not to the first day of his imprisonment, but to the twenty-first, as being the day that completed his act of bankruptcy. This limitation of the period of relation had existed since the passing of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, which also shortened the period of lying in prison that was necessary to constitute an act of bankruptcy.

Under the Insolvent Debtors Acts the same state of things did not prevail. The title of the assignee commenced with the vesting order, but though in general it thus had no relation to any anterior date, yet the case of goods in the reputed ownership of the insolvent was made an exception to the general rule; and goods falling within this category were to vest in the assignee from the commencement of the insolvent's imprisonment.

Now, by the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, which amalgamated bankruptcy and insolvency law, the old modes of discharging prisoners were swept away, and a new one provided by sects. 93 to 95 and 98 to 104. The former sections regulate the petitions of ordinary prisoners willing and able to petition. The latter sections contemplate two classes of prisoners—those who are unwilling, and those who are unable (through poverty) to get out of prison. A monthly return of all the inhabitants of prisons is to be made to the Court of Bankruptcy; and one of their officials is to visit each gaol within three weeks from the date of the return, to examine the prisoners, and to adjudicate bankrupt, and discharge, all trader prisoners who have been lying in prison for fourteen days, and all other prisoners who have been lying there for two months; whilst prisoners refusing to answer or otherwise obstructing dealings with their estate, may be committed for an extra month. Other prisoners, willing, but unable through poverty, to get released, may petition the Court in formâ pauperis, and then (sect. 99) are to be "brought up" to the county court of the district, and there adjudicated bankrupt. And the 103rd clause, under which the question in Bramwell v. Eglinton arose, is, "Every adjudication against any prisoner for debt so 'brought up' as aforesaid shall, unless the Court shall otherwise direct, have relation back to the date of his commitment or detention, as the case may be."

We cannot here go into any minute or lengthened examination of the language of the statute, but we may remark, that the word "detention" had only been used once previously in the statute (viz. in the 71st section, which defines generally acts of bankruptcy, through lying in prison), and then in conjunction with the word "committed;" and that the words "brought up" had only been previously used in the 99th section, whilst a bringing up might be implied in the 102nd section. In Bramwell v. Eglinton, the defendant, after the arrest of the bankrupt, had retaken his own goods from the bankrupt's house, where they had been in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt; and the assignees, relying on this 103rd clause, brought trover for those goods, whilst the defendant contended that the clause referred only to the case of a contumacious prisoner, dealt with by the 102nd section, and in which section the word "commitment" had been used, and the "detention" implied. It was also contended for the defendant, that the retaking was a protected transaction, under sect. 133 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1849. The Court of Queen's Bench, however, after taking time to consider, and experiencing "much embarrassment and great difficulty" in coming to any conclusion at all, decided in the plaintiff's favour. After an elaborate analysis of the statute, and various speculations as to the intentions of the Legislature, and regrets that those intentions had not been more clearly expressed, they were of opinion, that, as the words of sect. 103 were all satisfied, by applying that enactment to the case of a pauper prisoner who had been committed in execution, or detained, for debt, and brought up before the county court, the provision applied to this case; and also that, as the adjudication was made to relate back, not to the commitment as an act of bankruptcy, but to the commitment absolutely, there was here no prior act of bankruptcy, and therefore this transaction was not protected by sect. 133 of the act of 1849. The judgment also intimates, that, as regards other prisoners for debt not brought up before the county court, the question is still left open and undecided.

Now, it seems to us, that the Court has not construed this act in a right spirit. When a former act, passed in pari materia (6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 5), was before the Courts, a different rule was adopted. In the case of Higgins v. M'Adam (3 Y. & J. 1), the Court of Exchequer said, "The relation back to any antecedent period to make an act of bankruptcy, is a case strictissimi juris, and ought not to prevail, except where the words of the statute, upon which that construction is to be founded, are clear, and without doubt." And this ruling was approved and adopted in Moser v. Newman (6 Bing. 556) and Belcher v. Gummow (9 Q. B. 877); so that all the three Courts concurred in a broad and liberal construction of a similar bankruptcy act, and in favour of the rights of creditors; whereas the Court, in Bramwell v. Eglinton, has, "after much embarrassment and great difficulty," preferred a very narrow construction in favour of the rights of assignees.

As we are not bound by the same conventionalities as courts of law, or obliged deferentially to identify the framers of a statute with the Legislature, we have not much hesitation in pronouncing the 103rd section of the Bankruptcy Act of 1861 to be a blunder. If it was intended to work a relation back to the date of the commitment only in the case of pauper prisoners, no reason whatever can be assigned for making a distinction between this and the cases of other prisoners. It may, indeed, be said, that in this case the act is put in force by the voluntary act of the prisoner, and not put in force against him "in invitum," as in the case of contumacious prisoners; but the same remark would apply to the case of a prisoner petitioning under the 94th section; and, therefore, according to this classification, the relation back ought to operate only in the case of contumacious prisoners; as Bosanquet, J., in Sims v. Simpson (1 Bing. N. C. 317), points out in alluding to the then existing bankrupt and insolvent laws.

If, on the other hand, this section was intended to comprehend all prisoners discharged under the act, no reason has been given for such a retrograde step in legislation; and, moreover, the words used have, according to the judgment in Bramwell v. Eglinton, failed to accomplish their intended object.

It is also clear, that if in all cases of imprisonment, the title of the assignee is to relate back to the first day of imprisonment, bona fide transactions with the prisoner ought to be protected from that date also.

Upon the whole, there is only one part of this judgment with which we can heartily agree, viz. "that as to this, and other details of this very important act, it is much to be desired that the Legislature should interfere, and make clear enactments."

ON VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENTS.

AFTER considerable fluctuation, the rule that equity will not lend its assistance to perfect a conveyance on behalf of volunteers, has been restrained within the limits of good sense, and so as not needlessly to interfere with the common arrangements of property. The rule itself, a rule analogous to that of the common law, which denies the validity of a promise without consideration, is unexceptionable, but such an extension of the rule as would render an equitable estate or interest unassignable otherwise than for value, is opposed to that full and unfettered freedom of alienation—to that "jus disponendi," without which the "jus fruendi,"—the mere right of personal enjoyment becomes comparatively worthless. To deny effect to a voluntary disposition, on the ground simply of a legal estate or interest being outstanding in a third party (even in cases where such third party would be bound, on application by the settlor, to convey or assign according to his request), appears to be an arbitrary doctrine, which either gives to the settlor a locus penitentiae where such ought not to exist, or enables the settlor's representatives to disappoint his intentions, and to enrich themselves at the expense of his donees. In many cases a settlor does not trouble himself about, or, perhaps, is not cognisant of, the existence of outstanding legal estates or interests; but if he is aware of them, there can be no valid reason why, as a condition precedent to the efficacy of this voluntary disposition, he should put himself to the cost and inconvenience of obtaining a conveyance of them for the objects of his bounty. If the settlor's intention be fixed and definite, and his language and conduct shew that he contemplates an immediate, present disposition, any reference to the fact of there being, or not being, an outstanding legal estate or interest in some third person, seems wholly beside the question.

It is satisfactory to find that there is at present no ground to apprehend that the wholesome doctrine laid down in Kekewich v. Manning (1 De G., Mac., & G. 176), "that a person sui juris acting freely, fairly, and with sufficient knowledge, ought to have, and has, it in his power to make, in a binding and effectual manner, a voluntary gift of any part of his property, whether in possession or reversionary, and howsoever circumstanced," will be set aside or frittered away. In the recent case of Gilbert v. Overton (10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 721), Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., distinguishing, though evidently disapproving, the reactionary decision of Sir J. Romilly, M. R., in Bridge v. Bridge (16 Beav. 315), has decreed the assistance of the Court in support of a voluntary settlement of an interest under a contract for a lease, by a person who subsequently to the settlement obtained the lease in his own name. The Vice-Chancellor says—"All that is required is a valid declaration of trust," and goes on to assert that "the distinction between a simple assignment upon definite and declared trusts, and a declaration by the settlor constituting himself a trustee, has been quite exploded."

There is a case of Airey v. Hall (2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 658), the authority of which has been doubted by Messrs. Davidson & Waley (3 Conv. 845, part 2), but which seems quite in accordance with the broad principle above enunciated. In Airey v. Hall the settlor by deed purported to assign stock standing in his own name to trustees, upon definite trusts, but did not transfer the stock in the bank books. Sir J. Stuart, V. C., supported the settlement. It appears to us that the non-transfer affected the form only, and not the substance of the transaction, the real question being this—viz. did the settlor intend, or did he not intend, to create a present trust, either in himself or in a third party? If in a third party, the mere accidental circumstance of his having failed to vest the legal ownership in the trustee ought not to affect the question. The absence of an effectual transfer of the legal estate or interest may properly be regarded as an important element, in determining whether the settlor's intention be executory or executed, i. e. of immediate operation, but ought not, we think, to be made a criterion, negating conclusively the existence of a trust. We incline to the belief that Airey v. Hall was rightly decided.

Though the principles now applied to voluntary settlements are in the main founded on sound sense, a signal exception, but one rendered inveterate by a long course of judicial decision to be dealt with otherwise than by the Legislature, occurs in the well-known 27 Eliz. c. 4 (the Statute of Purchasers), which enables a settlor to defeat his own deliberate conveyance of real estate by a subsequent sale, and that even although the purchaser has full notice of the prior settlement. The reason given, that the sale itself is an indication of a fraudulent intention in the settlor, at the date of the settlement, is a mode of applying the doctrine of "relation" which will not bear a moment's consideration; the real fraud, of course, consists in the attempt of the settlor to play fast and loose with the volunteers, and in his conspiracy with the purchaser to defeat their reasonable expectations and destroy their vested rights. As an additional hardship for the unfortunate donees, it seems that when thus deprived of their estates by the settlor, they are utterly destitute of any charge on, or equity in respect of, the purchase money, which the settlor is permitted coolly to place in his own pocket. (See Daking v. Whimper, 26 Beav. 568). Few persons, not in the profession of the law, are aware, and very many, though in the profession, are not aware, and it would be difficult to make a foreigner believe, that at the present day it is practically impossible to make a free gift of a piece of English land.

We think these anomalies discreditable to the jurisprudence of the country, and quite deserving of an act of Parliament for its removal.

EXTRACTS

FROM THE EXPLANATORY OBSERVATIONS PREFIXED TO THE FIRST REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED TO PREPARE A CODE OF SUBSTANTIVE LAW FOR INDIA.

(Presented to both Houses).

WE have not judged it advisable that the rules for the devolution of movable property should be (as in England) different from the rules for the devolution of immovable property. The English who possess immovable property in India generally look upon it merely as a temporary investment, not intending to establish their families there permanently. Nor are the Armenians, the Parsees, or any of the classes to whom the new law is intended to apply, in the habit of making a distinction between the succession to movable and to immovable property, any more than the Hindoos and Mahomedans themselves.

We propose, therefore, that the general law of India shall make no distinction in this respect, but that the devolution of property of every kind shall be governed by one system of rules.

It has been necessary for us in one or two cases to introduce provisions affecting rights as between living persons. We propose that a man shall not, through the mere operation of law, acquire by marriage any interest in his wife's property during her life, but that she shall continue to possess the same rights with reference to it as if she were unmarried, and shall have full power to dispose of her property by will.

We propose, in case of intestacy, to give a widow the same rights in respect of all the property of her husband, as a widow has in England in respect of her husband's personal property; providing at the same time that when there is a widow, and no kindred, of the intestate, the whole property shall belong to her, instead of one-half going to her, and the other half to the Crown. For this provision, if it shall be approved, your Majesty's gracious sanction previous to enactment will be requisite.

The husband, where he survives his wife, is to have such rights in respect of her property as the wife has in respect of his property where she is the survivor.

Such powers as we propose to confer on the wife are frequently reserved to her even in England by the terms of her marriage settlement; and we believe that the introduction of the English property law of husband and wife would not be acceptable to any of the classes for whom these rules of succession are intended.

We propose to omit the rule of the English law by which, in cases of total intestacy, anything which a child may have received from the father in his lifetime by way of advancement, is deducted from his share of his father's estate. This rule, though founded upon a desire to equalise as far as possible the benefit derived by children from their father's property, often fails to effect that object, and proves productive of considerable inconveniences. It tends to encourage minute and difficult investigations of matters of family account, and it frequently interferes with the arrangements of a father who has given property to a child by way of advancement, and yet has not seen fit to make any alteration in his testamentary dispositions; and these evils, which are often felt in England, would be still more felt in India.

We have provided that persons of either sex shall at the age of eighteen be entitled to make a will, and be of age for all purposes. This is the age at which the courts of wards withdraw from the management of the estates of youthful landholders.

In all that relates to the execution and revocation of wills, we have taken as a basis the act known as Lord Langdale's (stat. 1 Vict. c. 26), which is already in force as to all wills proved in the high courts of the three presidencies other than the wills of Hindoos and Mahomedans. But we have modified its provisions as to execution, which, we think, would be likely to cause frequent intestacy.

Here, as elsewhere, we have departed from the English law where its provisions appeared to us to be objectionable in themselves, or especially inapplicable to India. Above all things we have aimed at giving effect to the plain meaning of the words of the testator, without endeavouring to do or to say for him that which he has not done or said for himself. We have accordingly discarded the rules by which the English Courts are compelled to presume, in the absence of any intimation of a contrary intention, that where a debtor bequeaths to his creditor a legacy equal to or exceeding the amount of his debt, the legacy is meant by the testator to be a satisfaction of the debt; that where a parent, who is under a legal obligation to provide a portion for his child, fails to do so, and afterwards bequeaths a legacy to the child, the legacy is meant to be a satisfaction or fulfilment of the obligation. We have in like manner discarded the rule of English law, that where a father bequeaths a legacy to a child, and afterwards advances a portion for that child, he thereby adeems the legacy. We have endeavoured so to frame the law in this respect as to prevent the occasion from ever arising, which in England requires a nice balancing of judgment, the exercise of large discretion, the prosecution of a difficult inquiry, and the admission of parol evidence of the intentions of testators.

We have inserted provisions for defining expressions used in wills to denote kindred and representation, and for giving the legacy absolutely to the first taker, where words are added which are (in legal phrase) words of limitation, and not of purchase.

We have restricted the power of creating successive interests in property by will, by providing that interests so created shall not extend beyond the lifetime of persons living at the testator's death, and the minority of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period, and to whom, if he attain the age of eighteen, the thing bequeathed is to belong. We have provided that a bequest to a person not born at the testator's death must comprise the whole of the interest of the testator in the thing bequeathed; and that where, at the time fixed for the payment of a legacy, the person for whom it was intended has not come into existence, the bequest shall have no effect. We have also provided that directions to accumulate the income arising from any property shall be void.

We have likewise provided against death-bed bequests to charitable uses by persons having near relatives.

On the subject of conditions, we have deemed it right to abstain from introducing into India the very refined distinctions which the Court of Chancery has, in questions relating to personal property, borrowed from the ecclesiastical courts. We think that the words of the will should be adhered to where no condition inconsistent with law or morality is sought to be imposed; that all bequests made upon illegal, immoral, or impossible conditions should be void; and that wherever the testator's wishes can be carried into effect, if expressed in one way, they ought to be permitted to take effect if expressed in any other way; so that whatever he can do by a limitation he ought to be allowed to do, by imposing a condition. It appears also to us, that whenever a condition subsequent is valid, if accompanied with a gift over, it ought to be valid without a gift over, and ought not to be treated as if it had been inserted merely to frighten the legatee by an unmeaning threat.

We do not propose to extend to India the rule, which enables an executor to pay any creditor (whether himself or another person) in preference to another creditor of equal degree. We have provided, that funeral and death-bed expenses, and charges of probate and administration, are to be first paid, then wages due to any labourer, artisan, or domestic servant employed by the deceased; and that in respect of no other debt shall a creditor be entitled to a preference, either by reason of its being secured by deed under seal, or on any other account.

On the subject of domicile we have provided, that a man shall not acquire a domicile in India merely by residing there as a soldier in her Majesty's service, or in the discharge of the duties of any public office, or in the exercise of any profession or calling. This provision is, as regards the bulk of the army, nothing more than a statement of the existing law. Its application to the staff corps, and to the official and professional classes, may, perhaps, be less favourable to the acquisition of an Indian domicile by those classes than the strict rules of English law, but we believe that it is the most just and suitable rule that can be laid down for India. We have, however, provided for the acquisition of an Indian domicile by persons desiring to possess it.

The rules which we have prepared are intended to apply generally to the immovable property in India of persons not professing the Hindoo or the Mahomedan religion, and to the movable property of all persons domiciled in India, and not professing the Hindoo or the Mahomedan religion. We desire, however, to point out, that one great object of the proposed code is ultimately to introduce one uniform system applicable to all classes, wherever this can be properly and safely accomplished.

Following the example set by the framers of the Indian Penal Code, we have made copious use of illustrations. All the commissioners think, that illustrations carefully framed are calculated to assist in the administration of the law, although we do not all take the same high view of the importance of illustrations which was expressed by the framers of the Penal Code. The advantages contemplated by those commissioners from the use of illustrations were set forth, and dilated on by them, in their letter to the Governor-General in Council, dated the 14th October, 1837, with which they submitted their draft of the Penal Code. The observations contained in that letter appear to be so pertinent to this matter, that we think it desirable to quote a portion of that part of it which relates to this subject:—

"One peculiarity in the manner in which this code is framed will immediately strike your Lordship in Council. We mean the copious use of illustrations. These illustrations will, we trust, greatly facilitate the understanding of the law, and will, at the same time, often serve as a defence of the law. In our definitions, we have repeatedly found ourselves under the necessity of sacrificing neatness and perspicuity to precision, and of using harsh expressions, because we could find no other expressions which would convey our whole meaning, and no more than our whole meaning. Such definitions, standing by themselves, might repel and perplex the reader, and would, perhaps, be fully comprehended only by a few students after long application. Yet such definitions are found, and must be found, in every system of law which aims at accuracy. A legislator may, if he thinks fit, avoid such definitions, and by avoiding them he will give a smoother and more attractive appearance to his workmanship; but in that case he finches from a duty which he ought to perform, and which somebody must perform. If this necessary but most disagreeable work be not performed by the lawgiver once for all, it must be constantly performed in a rude and imperfect manner by every judge in the empire. . . . We have, therefore, thought it right not to shrink from the task of framing these unpleasing but indispensable parts of a code. And we hope that when each of these definitions is followed by a collection of cases falling under it, and of cases which, though at first sight they appear to fall under it, do not really fall under it, the definition and the reasons which led to the adoption of it will be readily understood. . . . The definitions and enacting clauses contain the whole law. The illustrations make nothing law which would not be law without them. They only exhibit the law in full action, and shew what its effects will be on the events of common life.

"Thus the code will be at once a statute book and a collection of decided cases. The decided cases in the code will differ from the decided cases in the English law books in two most important points. In the first place, our illustrations are never intended to supply any omission in the written law, nor do they ever, in our opinion, put a strain on the written law. They are merely instances of the practical application of the written law to the affairs of mankind. Secondly, they are cases decided not by the judges but by the Legislature, by those who make the law, and who must know more certainly than any judge can know what the law is which they mean to make."

We also wish it to be fully understood that the correctness of the decision contained in any illustration is not to be questioned in the administration of the law. The illustrations are not merely examples of the law in operation, but are the law itself shewing by examples what it is. The statements that "the definitions and enacting clauses contain the whole law," and that "the illustrations make nothing law which would not be law without them," are correct, if understood as merely importing that, in the view of the Legislature, the illustrations determine nothing otherwise than what without them would have been determined by a right application of the rules to which they are annexed. As, however, much law has been made by judicial decisions, which determine questions respecting the application of written rules of law, so law may without impropriety be said to be made by the illustrations, in the numerous cases in which they determine points about which, without their guidance, there would be room for difference of opinion even among learned and able judges. It is chiefly in this way that the illustrations, while they make the definitions and rules more easy to be understood, also serve to render them more precise. The operation of judicial decisions in making law precise is a natural process, and that process is adopted and improved in the use of illustrations. The laws of England, as they exist, are to be found partly in rules and principles, some of which are contained in statutes and some in books not stamped with any legislative or even judicial authority, and partly in the reports of decisions by judicial tribunals. Law framed in the way in which we have endeavoured to frame it, also consists of rules and principles combined with decided cases, but with this difference, that the decisions are not made by judges in trying causes, but by the Legislature itself, in enacting the law, and though they are an important part of the law, settling points which without them would have been left to be determined by the judges, yet they are strictly confined to the function of guiding the judges in their future decisions, and of explaining in what manner the definitions and rules to which they are annexed are to be interpreted and applied.

THE SHIPPING LAW MANUAL: A CONCISE Treatise on the Law governing the Interests of Shipowners, Merchants, Masters, Seamen, and other Persons connected with British Ships. Together with the Acts of Parliament, Forms, and Precedents relating to the subject. Being especially intended for popular use in Seaport Towns. By W. T. GREENHOW, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"The 'Shipping Law Manual,' by Mr. W. T. Greenhow, brings into a popular shape, and to the latest date, the entire body of legal regulations affecting the shipping trade of the country alike in relation to owners, merchants, masters, and seamen, and is especially adapted for ordinary use by all persons connected with the business of seaport towns."—Times, Jan. 31, 1863.

"The object of the author of this book is to popularise the Law of Merchant Shipping, and to compress within the compass of a single volume all that is necessary to be known by those directly interested in British navigation. It was no easy task to condense and arrange this mass of legislation, so as to make it intelligible to the general reader. But Mr. Greenhow has achieved it, and placed within reach of every one connected with shipping a valuable compendium of the law relating to that branch of industry."—Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 3, 1864.

WHEN the recent re-arrangement of circuits took place, some entertained sanguine expectations that the Home Circuit would be amongst the number affected by the change. So confidently was this opinion held, that considerable discussion ensued as to the manner and extent of the interference with this circuit. According to one rumour, Essex was to be taken from it, and given to the Norfolk Circuit, whilst Hampshire was to be added to the Home in lieu of Essex; but no satisfaction was proposed to the Western Circuit for its loss of Winchester. According to another account, Essex was to be given to the Norfolk Circuit, and Sussex to the Western Circuit; whilst the remaining counties of Hertfordshire, Kent, and Surrey were to be formed with Middlesex into a central district, the assizes for which should be held coterminously with the other assizes or other circuits, but in London. In fact, a Central Civil Court, as well as a Central Criminal Court, would thus be sitting in London to represent the Home Circuit all the time that the other assizes were being held throughout the country. In this way, as it was said, vested interests might be recognised and upheld, an enormous abuse rectified, and a great boon to the public conceded.

But, as is well known, no interference with the Home Circuit took place; and it may be, therefore, wondered why, in these pages, and at this dead time of the legal year, the subject should be re-opened. To all such speculations our reply must be, that another assize on the Home Circuit has just terminated, that more than the usual needless waste of time and money has occurred, and that "indignatio facit sermonem." Let the question be considered closely. The Government, in declining to interfere with the Home Circuit, must have been either unwilling to injure alleged vested interests, or must have been unconvinced that any case was made out for interference. The vested interests are, we suppose, the rights of the public, and the rights of practitioners, whether barristers or attorneys. The public, it is asserted, have a right to have justice brought home to their own doors, as it is termed; and to compel the inhabitants of Hertfordshire, Kent, and Surrey, to resort to London for justice, is represented as a practical denial of this right. Such an argument might, perhaps, have proved convincing in the days before railways; but in the present time there can be little doubt but that most of the inhabitants of these three counties would find access to the metropolis more quickly, more cheaply, and more conveniently, than to their respective county towns. If this be true, the rights of the practitioners are not to be set against the rights of the public; the law is not manufactured or practised for the good of the lawyers, but for the public. But we very much doubt whether the hypothetical rights of lawyers would in any way be injured by the proposed abolition of this circuit. The present alleged exclusive rights of the barristers belonging to the circuit to share in its emoluments would be amply preserved by the restriction of the sittings of the proposed Central Civil Court and Central Criminal Court within a period when other barristers would be absent on their own respective circuits, whilst a great source of loss to them, traceable to the travelling and usual lavish expenditure attendant on circuit, would be dried up. Respectable attorneys would be only too happy to avoid the loss of time, and the inconvenience entailed on them by personal attendance at the petty provincial towns where the assizes are held; and the inferior class of attorneys, who only regard an assize trial as a means of swelling their bill of costs, do not deserve, and will not obtain, much commiseration for being compelled to abandon such a species of profit.

If, as we have already hinted, country causes arising within the three named counties can be more cheaply, more conveniently, and more expeditiously tried in London than in the assize towns, it would seem that already a strong case has been made out for the abolition of the Home Circuit. But this is not all the case. In reality, the proportion of country causes tried on this circuit is infinitesimally small, and the cause lists are mostly made up of London causes brought down to be tried at Hertford, Maidstone, Kingston, Croydon, or Guildford. In some instances this arises from the delay that would otherwise fall on suitors through not having their causes tried until the next sittings in London or Middlesex; and to avoid this delay extra expense and inconvenience are submitted to. But for the most part the lists, especially in Surrey, attain magnitude only through the interested efforts of a certain class of London solicitors, who are well aware that more is to be made out of a trial at the assizes than in town, and who in consequence keep for the Surrey venue all the trumpery, and frivolous, and vexatious actions that they can possibly rake together. Some proof of this, if it be necessary, may be found in the fact, that at the Guildford Assizes which are just over, eighty-one common jury causes were disposed of in five days. Without doubt, the promoters of this class of actions, and the inhabitants of the various assize towns find it to their interest to uphold and maintain the existing state of things, and to deprecate the touch by any rude hands of the altar of the ancient and time-honoured institution of the Home Circuit; but an almost effete arrangement is scarcely to be preserved only for the special behoof of these gentry.

The judges (on whom circuit throws great expense and much annoyance), the bar, and the majority of solicitors, would, we believe, be but too glad to discontinue the Home Circuit; and the public, if they once got hold of the true state of the case, would be unanimous in demanding its abolition. Of the inconvenience of a trial in the poky stuffy courts of provincial towns, all persons who have had painful experience thereof, can testify; but of the difference in expense between a trial there and in London or Middlesex, neither they nor the majority of the public have any idea. An honest attorney would inform his client that it would be a saving of money for him to pay a doubtful claim of 20*l.* or 30*l.*, rather than to go down and contest the matter at these assizes on the chance of a successful resistance; and this advice would be given, although the attorney would be aware that the other side probably speculated upon that very advice being given and followed.

We have no doubt but that the Profession, as a body, would concur in bearing testimony to the accuracy of what we have written; and no Royal Commission would be needed to elicit for the Lord Chancellor what a few queries from him to any judge, solicitor, or common-law barrister would draw forth; but it is not probable that until the public come to learn the flagrancy and scandal of the abuses that are practised upon them under the pretence of going the Home Circuit, its doom will ever be pronounced.

There is one class of men, we mean London jurors, who might, perhaps, murmur at any increase of the number of town trials, but if the mode of summoning London jurors were only fairly carried out, there would be no just ground of complaint on this score, even if the number of causes entered for trial here were increased one hundred fold.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The very distinguished lawyer, a copy of whose answer to the circular issued by the Bar Committee on Law Reporting is inserted ante, p. 325, is entitled to be attentively heard; the Profession, indeed—the working part of it at least—have long sat at his feet, to speak figuratively, as their Gamaliel in the law; in this instance, however, I find myself quite unable to concur in the views of his Lordship on the subject of reporting. Lord St. Leonards first divides the present reports into two classes—the early and unauthorised, the late and authorised—and then adds:—"Open to objection as the scheme may be, the Bar, I think, would not be willing to lose either the earlier or the later reporter." As one member of the Bar, I confess I should be delighted to lose the later reporter, whether authorised or not, not seeing the marked superiority of what are called the authorised reports, and being inclined to believe, that if your own reports, Sir, or any other equally well-conducted series, stood alone, free from what I cannot but deem a pernicious competition, they would be likely to satisfy all our requirements. I do not, however, advocate concentration to this extent, or to any extent, without the action of the Legislature. His Lordship proceeds to state, that he would not invoke legislative interference, or Government supervision, or the appointment of short-hand writers, because, to quote his words, "you can no longer prohibit, or control by the strong hand, reporting." I see no connexion between the fact stated and the reason given. Anybody, of course, may report, but a judge is not bound to listen to any report unless he chooses; precedent is authoritative, when ascertained, but, according to Lord St. Leonards' own admission, we have only arrived at this degree of certainty, that a newspaper report of a case will not be permitted to be read. It is this nervous apprehension of surrendering privileges that embarrasses our efforts in the direction of reform. The privilege of reporting for the ear of the Court should doubtless remain in the Bar, but, in my opinion, be exercised by barristers selected by Government in each court for that purpose. His Lordship continues:—"There are, perhaps, too many weekly reporters, but not too many of those I term the regular reports." Is the difference, in this sentence, between reporters and reports intended? I suspect not; but the truth is, that there are too many reporters, authorised or not, and too many reports. His Lordship, however, thinks that the evil should be left "to cure itself," and that a still greater number of frail reporting vessels, laden with more or less costly precedent, may be periodically launched, if they be deemed likely to reach the port of judicial approbation. To quote further:—"One evil of numerous reporters is, that cases, however unimportant, are reported . . ."—an evil, truly, of portentous growth! Again: "The regular reports are, no doubt, open to some objection. Many cases depending upon local acts, which are not likely ever again to come into discussion, are reported at great length; so cases, for example, depending upon the construction of a long correspondence, can hardly be usefully reported, unless the judge lays down or explains a rule of law. It would be useless to multiply instances." I do not think that his Lordship is here very happy in his selection, or very lucid in his definition, of what ought to be omitted from a volume of reports. His Lordship next refers to the propriety (which he admits) of a judge going at large into an examination of the facts, "for the satisfaction of the suitor" (I fear that the judgments of Lord Justice Knight Bruce could not be cited as instances of this habit), but says, that the reporter would not be justified in fully reporting such a judgment. He generally does so, however. His Lordship continues:—"But these things can be easily corrected, and it would be desirable that one uniform plan of printing should be adopted. No number should close with part of a case," &c.—the arrangement italicised, and prohibited by his Lordship as a sort of fraud upon the purchaser, is, I should imagine, a simple necessity, and I cannot but think that these remarks of his Lordship are infra dignitatem. To continue:—"The booksellers have so managed, that after the lawyer has half-bound his reports, he finds their value in his hands not largely exceeding the cost of the binding." Can this be true? Take Hare's Reports, for instance; are the eleven volumes that I see before me worth (mine are whole bound) not much more than 1*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*? Hear the conclusion:—"There should, therefore, be no reports of unnecessary length, or of points not of importance." Omitting the word "therefore," which casts a slur on a very respectable body of the community, I agree with his Lordship. Further:—"The long-continued labours of a reporter should not be overlooked in dispensing legal patronage." What connexion has this statement with the subject? His Lordship then states, that although he is opposed to legislative authority, he would have some control exercised over reporters. Of what nature? That of the Bench and Bar. "The reporter should not be under or subject to the judge, but should be in confidential communication with the judges." His Lordship then refers to the fact, that Lord Denman gave copies of his judgments to two rival reporters—he might have done similarly to half a dozen—and thereupon follows this amazing statement:—"It is not probable that there will hereafter be more than one report of the proceedings of each Court." Whence does this non-probability emanate? Hear, O incredulous reader! From what is now passing—The Report of the committee, which his Lordship presumes will be made (which has been made, and given general dissatisfaction)—from the appointment of another committee, a permanent body, a sort of family council (his Lordship's own phrase), whose duty would be to keep a friendly eye (again his Lordship's own phrase) over the reports! The power of this council, which is to suggest improvements, to communicate with the Bench and Bar thereon, to call a general meeting of the Bar, is to be exercised so as not to wound the feelings of" &c. &c. Any attempt to purchase the interests in any existing reports is considered by his Lordship to be "altogether inadmissible." His Lordship next considers what ought to be done with the reports, existing and future. His answer to this question is simple and concise—nothing ought to be done with either. We cannot hope to excel Comyns, Gilbert, Coke, Plowden, Viner—why, then, digest the cases? If we prefer poetry to prose, we have the following exquisite couplet:—

"If he for life enfeoff in fee,
It bars remainders in contingency."

So much with respect to existing reports. As to future decisions, his Lordship does not rest altogether on the same basis of argument, but asks, in effect, "Who is to perform the task of consolidation and revision?" His Lordship lastly refers to digressive treatises on various branches of the law, and says, that such treatises only influence the judges by the force of the observations contained therein, but are happily not law. However able the pleading of his Lordship may be, the statute book has, up to a certain period, been profitably expurgated and revised; and I am inclined to think, with Lord Westbury, that our steps should be towards codification. Would any commercial man, in the possession of his right senses, allow papers to accumulate upon him, without an attempt at arrangement or revision? The country groans under a mass of legal rubbish, which ought to have been long since removed. We are still toiling in the morasses of the law, where not seldom the ignis fatuus of wrong decision leads the unwary astray. To be delivered from these existing evils by expurgation and revision would be an incalculable boon to the public—to be delivered, as far as possible, from their recurrence, ought to be demanded by the same public from the Legislature as a right. It is easy to leave matters in statu quo, and there is always difficulty connected with amendment. The increase of reporters and reports has doubtless partly arisen from the action of cheap literature in this direction. We ought to have reports cheap, but do not; we ought to have them certain, but do not. Our social privileges lie in the hands of a few persons as judges and jurymen, and we have no ground for complaint; let the privilege of reporting for the ear of the Court be similarly restricted, and, by the appointment of a public reporter for each court, let the profession and the public be freed from a system (if it deserve the name) alike of competition and confusion.

Your obedient servant,

Rolls Chambers, Chancery-lane, G. L.

Reviews.

The Institutions of the English Government; being an Account of the Constitution, Powers, and Procedure of its Legislative, Judicial, and Administrative Departments. With copious References to Ancient and Modern Authorities. By HOMERSHAW COX, M.A., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "The British Commonwealth," &c. [Sweet. 1863.]

The British constitution may be looked on in three points of view:—

1. Historically—i. e. with reference to its rise and progress.
2. Actually—i. e. in the existing state of its fundamental laws.
3. Philosophically—i. e. the theory of it, as deduced from its elements and practice.

The first of these, however interesting and valuable in itself, would hardly form a sufficient base for a treatise on the constitution. Besides, a treatise of that kind, in order to be intelligible to the reader, requires a considerable amount of historical knowledge, and it likewise involves many disputed questions.

The second, standing alone, would be incomplete. The essence of the British constitution we take to be, that its fundamental principles for the most part remain, though its non-essential ones and its forms change. Things may form part of the constitution, understood in one sense, which are not constitutional, and vice versa; e. g. the institution of slavery, which formerly existed in this country, was at that time an element in its constitution, yet, tried by our modern notions at least, was eminently unconstitutional. So, at the present day, it would be taken for granted by most persons that the publicity of the debates in Parliament is essentially part of our constitution, which it undoubtedly is in one sense, yet it was condemned in theory, and almost unknown in practice, until within about a century of our own time.

The third is open to still greater objection. Dealing, as it necessarily does, with theory only, the speculative, and sometimes the imaginative, are apt to take the place of the present and real.

On the whole, the true way of treating the subject seems to be, to take for basis the second of the above, namely, the actual state of the system, using the other two as adjuncts. The British constitution, thus understood, may be described, if not defined—the spirit of the British laws, and the forms of the British government. The obvious difficulty in writing on the subject—a difficulty which has been amply illustrated only too often—is, to avoid adopting or representing party, doubtful, or uncertain principles as essential parts of the system. The general notion of the British constitution entertained by the bulk of mankind in this country is, that it lies in the Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights, the Habeas Corpus Act, &c.; but it is, in truth, a collection of principles and usages, of which those invaluable documents are but fragments. Many others, again, would define it a government by King, Lords, and Commons—a definition which conveys an idea of our constitution no more than the inspection of a skeleton conveys an idea of the human frame, and perhaps not so much.

The author of the work before us, as also Professor Creasy, in his much smaller work*, intitled "Rise and Progress of the British Constitution," seem to have considered this as the proper mode of treating the subject.

* The Treatise of Professor Creasy is contained in 340 pages small 8vo.; that of Mr. Cox extends to 737 pages large 8vo., exclusive of the preliminary analysis and index.

The last mentioned says (p. 3), "An impartial and earnest investigator may remain convinced that England has a constitution, and that there is ample cause why she should cherish it. And by this is meant, that he will recognise and admire, in the history, the laws, and the institutions of England, certain great leading principles and fundamental political rules, which have existed from the earliest periods of our nationality down to the present time; expanding and adapting themselves to the progress of society and civilisation; advancing and varying in development, but still essentially the same in substance and in spirit." And the nature of Mr. Cox's work is indicated by its title, as well as the Preface, in which he informs us (p. vii), that "the object of the following pages is to collect from ancient and modern authorities a general account of the British Government, of the powers and practice of its several departments, and of the constitutional principles affecting them." P. ix, "In order to confine this work within the limits of a compendium, it has been deemed advisable to exclude all researches of purely antiquarian interest, and all merely speculative politics. It would not, indeed, have been expedient to have excluded all historical and theoretical researches, for there are many important provisions of the constitution which would be unintelligible without reference to them. But throughout this work such researches have been carefully limited to the purpose of illustrating the use and operation of established principles and institutions of government. Scire autem propriè est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere." And in the work itself (p. 2), "It is requisite at the outset of this inquiry to define the limits of constitutional science. It is the province of the science of legislation to investigate generally the principles upon which laws ought to be founded; but of constitutional science, to consider only the manner in which laws ought to be made and executed. It is, therefore, not intended here to enter at large upon that wide field of investigation which the science of legislation comprehends, but to survey only that part of it which relates exclusively to the method adopted in this country of making and executing the laws. The two-fold object of constitutional science just mentioned, corresponds to a division of the functions of Government into two classes,—that of making laws, and that of executing them." He subdivides the executive power into the judicial and administrative bodies.

Following up these views, Mr. Cox divides his work into three books, treating respectively,—1. "Legislation;" 2. "Judicature;" and 3. "Administrative Government."

These are subdivided into chapters, as follows:—

Book 1.—LEGISLATURE.

Chap. 1. Divisions of Government.

2. The authority of Parliament.
3. The origin of Parliaments.
4. The acts of Parliament.
5. Legislative prerogatives of the Crown.
6. The parliamentary powers of the Crown.
7. The constitution of the House of Lords.
8. The constitution of the House of Commons.
9. Procedure in Parliament.
10. The Privy Council and Cabinet Council.
11. The rights of petition, public meetings, and the press.

Book 2.—JUDICATURE.

Chap. 1. Divisions of the judicature.

2. Origin of courts of law.
3. Judicial offices.
4. Procedure in courts of justice generally.

5. The supreme power of the law.
6. The judicature of Parliament and the Lords.
7. The judicature of the Privy Council.
8. The Court of Chancery.
9. The superior courts of common law.
10. Courts of criminal jurisdiction.
11. Courts of special civil jurisdiction.

Book 3.—ADMINISTRATIVE GOVERNMENT.

Chap. 1. Division of administrative offices.

2. Administrative prerogatives of the Crown.
3. The title of the Crown.
4. Origin and distribution of administrative offices.
5. The Privy Council and its committees.
6. The Secretarial departments.
7. The Fiscal administrative offices.
8. Military and naval offices.
9. Local administrative government.

Such is the plan of Mr. Cox's work, which has been ably carried into execution by its author. It is written in a clear style, contains a vast amount of constitutional knowledge, and is calculated to give a good idea of the working of our political system, while mere party questions have been carefully eschewed. Mr. Cox, as appears to us, evinces sound knowledge of the principles which pervade the British constitution. As instances, we may refer to the seventh chapter of the first book, where he discusses the well-known theory of the balance of power in the three branches of the Legislature, which he defends, we think successfully, against the attacks of Bentham and J. Mill (pp. 75, 76, 77, 88, 91). So at pp. 247-258, there is a good dissertation comprising much historical information, on "the origin of the two modern principles of dependence of the cabinet upon parliamentary majorities—and of political unity of the cabinet." The discussion at pp. 431-438, of the proposition that laws may be theoretically perfect, and yet practically oppressive, well repays perusal; and we commend it especially to those persons who, if a "Department of Justice" is to be established, would construct it so as to place the judges under the control of a minister of the Crown. And those who seek to abolish grand juries, and all rights of private individuals to prosecute for crime, meet with no encouragement from Mr. Cox. (Pp. 457, 458).

The practice and usages of debates in Parliament are well explained in this work. (B. 1, ch. 9). This is a subject of more importance to the general community than might at first sight be imagined, for the rules of debate in well-conducted public meetings usually follow, as far as it is known, the practice of the House of Commons. An instance of inconvenience from ignorance of it may be seen in Reg. v. The Vicar and Churchwardens of Hammermith (3 B. & S. 504, note). The writer of this notice was present at a meeting, where, on a motion being made, and an amendment proposed, the question presented itself, whether the motion or the amendment ought to be put first, and both parties appealed to the practice in the House of Commons. The chairman, a barrister of some standing, laid down that there the amendment was always put first; in which he was corrected by another barrister, also of some standing, who declared this to be a popular error, as there the motion was always put first. A slight knowledge of the forms of that House would shew, that there is no universal rule on the subject, and that whether the motion or the amendment is put first, depends upon the nature of the amendment (see the present work, pp. 140-1); and cases sometimes occur in which it becomes a matter of considerable difficulty to say which is entitled to take precedence.

There is also a good discussion, at pp. 376-8, of the disputed question, "Whether counsel are justified in advocating a cause which they believe to be unjust," which the author determines in the affirmative, for reasons which appear satisfactory. Mr. Cox does not distinctly say how this would be if the advocate knew the cause to be unjust, e. g. if he would be justified in defending a person accused of an offence which he himself saw committed by the accused.

But although we have read this work with much pleasure, we must not neglect our duty as critics, in pointing out errors or blemishes in it, and although these are chiefly respecting matters of a technical nature, there are others of a more serious character.

In the first place, the work is preceded by an analysis of fifty pages, which, we think, might be omitted both with safety and advantage. As a table of contents it is too long, as well as needless, there being also a table of contents of seven pages, while as a treatise it is too short.

To come to the work itself. At p. 290, Mr. Cox informs us, that the 32 Geo. 3, c. 60 (Fox's Libel Act), "greatly enlarged the functions of the jury in cases of 'indictment or information for the making and publishing any libel.'" But that act both is and professes to be merely declaratory of the common law, which had been shamefully invaded in cases of libel by several unconstitutional decisions. So, judging from what Mr. Cox says, at pp. 217 and 292, he would seem to be under the erroneous, though common impression, that the protection from civil and criminal proceedings enjoyed by persons publishing libellous matter in parliamentary papers, is derived solely from stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 9. To determine this either way, is to beg the question in dispute between the House of Commons and the Court of Queen's Bench, in the proceedings which gave rise to the celebrated case of Stockdale v. Hansard (9 Ad. & El. 1). The effect of that statute, as it appears from its preamble, was to give summary protection to such parties; and by the 4th section, "It is expressly declared and enacted, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken, or hold or construed, directly or indirectly, by implication, or otherwise, to affect the privileges of Parliament in any manner whatsoever."

At p. 404, in stating the contents of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, Mr. Cox lays down, that "in any proceeding in any court of justice the parties thereto, or persons interested in it, are competent and compellable to give evidence," without noticing the exceptions in the 4th section, of proceedings for adultery, and actions for breach of promise of marriage. At p. 405-6, Mr. Cox commits an error, into which many more eminent persons have fallen, that "in civil causes, the party on whom the burthen of making out the affirmative lies, begins by addressing the jury." This is only a general rule; where there is a presumption of law, or a strong presumption of fact, in favour of the affirmative, the burthen of proof is cast on the opposite party, as it also is if the negative matter lies within the peculiar knowledge of that party. (See Best on Evid., § 639, 3rd ed., and Taylor on Evid., § 350, 4th ed.) The correct doctrine is, that the party begins on whom the burthen of proof lies; besides which, it is not limited to civil causes. So, p. 551, that in criminal cases, if the accused calls witnesses to character only, the prosecutor is not entitled to reply; the truth being, that he has a right to do so, although it is not usual to exercise it. (See the authorities cited in Best on Evid., § 264, 3rd ed., and Taylor on Evid., § 361, 4th ed.) There is a worse error at p. 572. It is there stated, that "applications for restitution of conjugal rights, or for judicial separation on the grounds of adultery, cruelty, or desertion, may be made either to the Divorce Court or to the Assize Courts;" for which the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 17, is cited. But so much of this enactment as relates to the Assize Courts has been repealed by the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 19.

And, lastly (although this is a very small matter), the name of the author of the celebrated "Treatise on the Principles of Pleading in Civil Actions," is "Stephen," not "Stephens," an error committed in several places. (Pp. 382, 393, 394, 512, 526).

These and similar errors, which must be looked on as "formoso corpore naevi," will, we trust, be corrected in future editions of this work, of which it is to be hoped there will be many; and in the meantime, we cordially recommend the present one to our readers.

EXTRACTS

FROM THE EXPLANATORY OBSERVATIONS PREFIXED TO THE FIRST REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED TO PREPARE A CODE OF SUBSTANTIVE LAW FOR INDIA.

(Presented to both Houses).

(Concluded from p. 335).

Another matter of great importance is closely connected with this subject, viz. how best to prevent the law from being overlaid with an accumulating mass of comments and decisions, an evil which no mode of framing the law itself can completely exclude. On this subject also, we think it useful to quote and adopt a portion of the observations contained in the letter of the authors of the Penal Code, already referred to:—

"The publication of this collection of cases decided by legislative authority will, we hope, greatly limit the power which the courts of justice possess, of putting their own sense on the laws. But we are sensible, that neither this collection, nor any other, can be sufficiently extensive to settle every question which may be raised as to the construction of the code. Such questions will certainly arise, and, unless proper precautions be taken, the decisions on such questions will accumulate till they form a body of law of far greater bulk than that which has been adopted by the Legislature. Nor is this the worst. While the judicial system of British India continues to be what it now is, these decisions will render the law not only bulky, but uncertain and contradictory. . . . But whether the present judicial organisation be retained or not, it is most desirable that measures should be taken to prevent the written law from being overlaid by an immense weight of comments and decisions. We conceive that it is proper for us, at the time at which we lay before your Lordship in Council the first part of the Indian Code, to offer such suggestions as have occurred to us on this important subject. . . . In civil suits which are actually pending, we think it, on the whole, desirable to leave to the Courts the office of deciding doubtful questions of law which have actually arisen in the course of litigation. But every case in which the construction put by a judge on any part of the code is set aside by any of those tribunals from which at present there is no appeal in India, and every case in which there is a difference of opinion in a court composed of several judges as to the construction of any part of the code, ought to be forthwith reported to the Legislature. Every judge of every rank whose duty it is to administer the law as contained in the code should be enjoined to report to his official superiors every doubt which he may entertain as to any question of construction which may have arisen in his court. Of these doubts, all which are not obviously unreasonable ought to be periodically reported by the highest judicial authorities to the Legislature. All the questions thus reported to the Government might with advantage be referred for examination to the Law Commission, if that commission should be a permanent body. In some cases it will be found that the law is already sufficiently clear, and that any misconception which may have taken place is to be attributed to weakness, carelessness, wrongheadedness, or corruption on the part of an individual, and is not likely to occur again. In such cases it will be unnecessary to make any change in the code. Sometimes it will be found that a case has arisen respecting which the code is silent. In such a case it will be proper to supply the omission. Sometimes it may be found that the code is inconsistent with itself. If so, the inconsistency ought to be removed. Sometimes it will be found that the words of the law are not sufficiently precise. In such a case it will be proper to substitute others. Sometimes it will be found that the language of the law, though it is as precise as the subject admits, is not so clear that a person of ordinary intelligence can see its whole meaning. In these cases it will generally be expedient to add illustrations such as may distinctly shew in what sense the Legislature intends the law to be understood, and may render it impossible that the same question, or any similar question, should ever again occasion difference of opinion. In this manner every successive edition of the code will solve all the important questions as to the construction of the code which have arisen since the appearance of the edition immediately preceding. Important questions, particularly questions about which courts of the highest rank have pronounced opposite decisions, ought to be settled without delay; and no point of law ought to continue to be a doubtful point more than a few years after it has been mooted in a court of justice. An addition of a very few pages to the code will stand in the place of several volumes of reports, and will be of far more value than such reports, inasmuch as the additions to the code will proceed from the Legislature, and will be of unquestionable authority, whereas the reports would only give the opinions of the judge, which other judges might venture to set aside.

"It appears to us also highly desirable, that if the code shall be adopted, all those penal laws which the Indian Legislature may from time to time find it necessary to pass, should be framed in such a manner as to fit into the code. The language ought to be that of the code. No word ought to be used in any other sense than that in which it is used in the code. The very part of the code in which the new law is to be inserted ought to be indicated. If the new law rescinds or modifies any provision of the code, that provision ought to be indicated. In fact, the new law ought, from the day on which it is passed, to be part of the code, and to affect all the other provisions of the code, and to be affected by them as if it were actually a clause of the original code. In the next edition of the code, the new law ought to appear in its proper place."

Although the illustrations, we believe, will obviate many questions of construction, and will do much to fix the sense of the law, yet, undoubtedly, many cases will occur in which there will be a difference of opinion among judges as to what the law is. Room will still be left for doubts as to the meaning of rules, and also as to the right application of illustrations; and cases will no doubt arise, where the enacted law is silent; in all such cases the judges will be compelled to use their law-supplying power. It will, consequently, inevitably follow, if no measures are taken to prevent it, that the enacted law will ere long be encumbered with a mass of comments and decisions; and although the number of chief courts has been reduced since the letter we have quoted was written, yet such is still the judicial system of India that probably many of those decisions will be opposed to others of equal authority.

We agree with the framers of the Penal Code in thinking, that for the prevention of this great evil, the enacted law ought, at intervals of only a few years, to be revised and so amended as to make it certain, as completely as possible, in the form of definitions of rules or of illustrations, everything which may from time to time be deemed fit to be made part of it, leaving nothing to rest as law on the authority of previous judicial decisions. Each successive edition, after such a revision, should be enacted as law, and would contain, sanctioned by the Legislature, all judge-made law of the preceding interval deemed worthy of being retained. On these occasions, too, the opportunity should be taken to amend the body of law under revision in every practicable way, and especially to provide such new rules of law as might be required by the rise of new interests and new circumstances in the progress of society.

We have also to suggest, for the due administration of the law under this code if adopted, that when cases of difficulty occur, no resort should be had to any other system of law for the purpose of authoritatively solving an ambiguity or supplying an omission, and that the judges must decide cases unprovided for by the code in the manner they consider most consistent with the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience.

In one matter of detail we would suggest an important departure from the course proposed by the framers of the Penal Code. It seems to us deserving of the consideration of your Majesty's Government, whether it would not be advisable that the reports which, according to that course, would be made to the Legislature in India, should not rather be made to the Government there, and be then transmitted to the Secretary of State for India, and that the new editions of bodies of law should be prepared in this country.

OFFICE OF LAND REGISTRY.

THE following GENERAL RULES AND ORDERS, dated the 6th July, 1864, have been issued by the registrar. We do not pretend to understand them, and therefore print them verbatim, and without comment; but we think it will be seen, that, as is necessarily the case in any public office, the formalities are pretty numerous, and the expense will be, of course, proportionate:—

As to Dispositions of Land on the Register completed at the Office under the 64th Section of the Act.

1. Upon any attendance at the office under the 64th section of the act, and the 25th of the General Orders of the 1st October, 1862, the applicant shall bring into the office the document proposed to be executed, prepared in one of the statutory forms. An affidavit of the identity of the conveying or disposing party as a registered owner shall be furnished. Such affidavit shall be made by a solicitor, unless the registrar shall for any reason think proper otherwise to direct.

2. If the registered owner shall not personally attend at the office, he must be represented by an agent duly authorised to execute the proposed document, who shall personally attend at the office. A power of attorney, prepared in the statutory form, authorising such agent to make the proposed conveyance or disposition, and an affidavit of the execution of such power of attorney, and of the identity of the person executing the same as a registered owner, and of the identity of such agent as the person named in the power of attorney, shall be left in the office. Such affidavit shall be made by a solicitor, unless the registrar shall for any reason think proper otherwise to direct.

3. A statement in writing of the terms in which the final entry of the document in the register is proposed to be made shall be prepared, and shall be settled by the registrar, and any objection made to such settlement shall be proceeded on in like manner as provided for by the 13th of the General Orders of the 1st October, 1862, with reference to the original registration.

As to Dispositions of Land on the Register by Document not testamentary, and not completed in the Office, under the 64th Section.

4. For the purpose of registration, the original document, and an affidavit by an attesting witness, if any, or, if no attesting witness, by some person verifying the execution thereof by the registered owner, and an affidavit made by a solicitor (unless the registrar shall for any reason think proper otherwise to direct), identifying the person executing such document with the person named in the register, shall be left in the office.

5. If the document proposed to be registered shall have been executed under a power of attorney, the power of attorney shall be produced, and if the registrar shall so direct, left in the office, and the execution thereof by, and the identity of, the registered owner, and the execution of the document by, and the identity of, the attorney, must be verified in like manner as provided by the second of these Orders.

Wills affecting Land on the Register.

6. Where the registration of any will, or of any estate or interest thereunder, is required, the person applying to register the same shall leave in the office a copy of the will or a memorial containing a copy of all the provisions in the will relating to or affecting the registered land; and the copy or memorial left in the office shall be examined and ascertained to be correct at the expense of the applicant, in such manner as the registrar shall direct, and the applicant, if required, shall, at the time of leaving such copy or memorial, or when required by the registrar, deposit in the office a sum sufficient to meet the expense of so verifying the same; the amount of such deposit to be settled by the registrar.

Memorials of Facts affecting Land on the Register.

7. Where it is required that any birth, marriage, death, descent, intestacy, or other fact, shall be entered in the register, the person desiring to register the same shall make an application for that purpose signed by him or his solicitor, and referring to a memorial signed in like manner, and left in the office, together with such application, and which memorial shall state the number of the estate on the register to which the application relates, and the fact or other particular to be entered in the register, together with the nature of the evidence in support thereof. Such evidence, and evidence of the identity of the person affected thereby as a person named in the register, shall be left in the office.

Memorials of Judgments, &c.

8. Where it is required that any judgment, Crown debt, order, decree, execution, or other liability, registered in the office of the senior Master of the Court of Common Pleas, shall be entered in the register, the person desiring to register the same shall make an application for that purpose, signed by him or his solicitor, and referring to a memorial signed in like manner, and left at this office with such application; and which memorial shall contain the number of the estate on the register to which the application relates, and an official copy of the entry in the books of the said office of the Court of Common Pleas relating to such judgment or liability. An affidavit of the identity as a registered owner of the person whose estate is sought to be charged, must also be left with the application. On the satisfaction or discharge of any such judgment or other liability, a note thereof shall be entered on the register, on an application for that purpose, signed by the registered owner whose estate was charged by such judgment or other liability, or his solicitor, and on such notice being given, and evidence produced, as the registrar may require.

Transfer of Mortgages of Land on the Register.

9. Where land is entered on the register as subject to any mortgage, or any like charge upon the transfer or other dealing with such mortgage or charge, the person applying to enter the same in the register shall, in case there has been any dealing with, or transmission of, or interest created or arisen in, the same not appearing in the register, leave in the office a memorial or abstract thereof, and produce evidence to prove the title proposed to be entered in the register.

10. Where notice is given, in pursuance of the 77th section of the act, and 29th of the General Orders of the 1st October, 1862, the instrument referred to in such notice must be produced, and the case proceeded with in all respects as is by these Orders provided with respect to dispositions generally, unless the registrar shall for any reason think proper otherwise to direct.

Generally as to Land on the Register.

11. No entry shall be made in the register of any document before the stamps in respect of the fees payable under the 127th section of the act have been affixed on some document sent to, or lodged in, the office with reference to the proposed registration, and all expenses payable under any General Order have been paid or provided for.

12. Where the value of the land on the register affected by any document proposed to be registered, and on the registration of which an ad valorem fee is payable, does not appear from such document (the same not being a mortgage or charge), a statement in writing of such value, under the hand of some competent person, shall be left in the office, and the fee payable in respect thereof shall be thereupon paid upon the sum mentioned in such statement to be the value of the property. If such statement, however, shall not be satisfactory to the registrar as to the value, further proceedings shall be taken to ascertain the same, under the 35th and 36th of the General Orders of the 1st October, 1862, and such further fee shall be paid as the registrar shall thereupon direct.

13. A printed or written copy of every document proposed to be registered, and which by the act is required to be printed, must be left in the office, and when such copy has been examined with the original, under the direction of the registrar, and the original has been stamped or indorsed, as provided for by the 75th section of the act, the original shall be returned, on a proper receipt being given for the same.

14. All printed copies or memorials, or written copies or memorials, not by the act required to be printed, left in the office for registration, shall be printed or written on paper of the same description and size as that on which bills in Chancery are required to be printed.

15. In case no printed copy of any document required to be printed shall be left in the office, a sum sufficient to meet the cost of printing shall, at the time of leaving the document for registration, be deposited in the office, the amount of such deposit to be settled by the registrar.

Production of Land Certificate on Transfer.

16. Where a land certificate has been issued, to the possession of which the registered owner whose interest is proposed to be dealt with is entitled, the same must be produced to the registrar, or the non-production thereof satisfactorily accounted for, before the registration of any proposed dealing with the property is completed.

Completion of Registration.

17. The evidence to be produced of the execution or signature of any document proposed to be registered, and of the identity of any person, and otherwise in support of any proposed registration, shall be such as shall, in the judgment of the registrar, be satisfactory; and when the registrar is satisfied therewith, and that the several other matters required by the said act and by General Orders made thereunder to be done prior to registration have been done, he shall forthwith complete the proposed registration.

The Register.

18. The registrar may keep the books of the register in such manner that the entries therein shall from time to time shew only the estates, rights, powers, interests, charges, and incumbrances, exceptions, qualifications, and conditions, for the time being, appearing from the register to be subsisting or capable of taking effect in the land registered under the number to which such entries relate, and for that purpose may from time to time withdraw from the register, by cancellation, any official note or entry.

19. When any document is received for registration, an official note of reference to the same shall be forthwith made in the "record of title," or "register of incumbrances," as the case may require, which shall consist of a reference to the document, and the date when it was received, and the registration thereof when completed shall bear date in accordance with such note. But if the applicant shall not complete the registration within such time as the registrar shall fix for that purpose, the registrar may cancel such note.

20. Where any registered land shall become divided by means of any absolute transfer, the registrar may make up a separate record of the particulars of the part so transferred, and the subsisting estates, rights, powers, interests, charges, and incumbrances, exceptions, qualifications, and conditions therein, distinguished by a separate number, and the part so transferred shall thenceforth be registered as a separate estate. In case of such separate registration, any map of the land deposited in the office shall, at the expense of the applicant, be altered in such manner as the registrar shall direct, so as properly to distinguish thereon the part of the land so transferred, and separately registered.

21. In every case of a dealing with a part only of any land on the register, the registrar may require such maps of such land to be made and lodged in the office, at the expense of the applicant, as he may think fit, and the 7th and 11th of the General Orders of the 1st October, 1862, shall in all respects apply to such maps.

22. Where, by reason of the division of or dealing with any land registered under a particular number, the description of the land then remaining registered under such number shall, in the opinion of the registrar, be no longer correct or be unnecessarily complicated, and the registrar shall think that the same ought to be corrected, or that a new map thereof ought to be made, the registrar may, on the application and at the expense of the person seised, or entitled to the possession, of the land, correct such description, and may also cause such new map to be made and marked with the like number as the map deposited in the office; and such description so corrected, and such new map (such new map being first deposited in the office), shall thenceforth be the description and map of the land registered under such number.

23. Where land is subject by will to a charge of debts or legacies, the names of the creditors or legatees shall not be entered in the register unless the registrar shall think fit to do so, but the nature of the charge and the persons to raise the same shall be entered or described in the register.

24. Where moneys are payable to trustees having power to give receipts for the same, the names of the persons beneficially entitled to such moneys shall not be entered in the register unless the registrar shall think fit so to do, but the nature of the trust shall be shortly stated or referred to, and the names of the trustees shall be entered on the register.

25. The registrar shall enter all leases, and agreements for leases (not registered under the 26th section of the act), which are to be registered under the provisions of the act, in the "Register of Mortgages and Incumbrances;" but no under-lease or assignment of, or dealing with, the interest of the lessee, only under such leases or agreements, shall be entered in the register, unless the registrar shall think proper to make such entry.

26. The registration of any document or title under any number on the register shall not be deemed registration of such document or title, in respect of any lands not entered on the register under such number.

Examination of Married Women.

27. When any married woman is to be examined under the 115th section of the act, in the case of any application to the Office of Land Registry, such application shall be in writing, and the examination of the married woman shall be made after such application is prepared; and in the case of any consent to be given by any married woman, or of any act to be done by her, or of her becoming a party to any proceeding in the office under the said act, the matter or thing to which her consent is to be given or the act to be done by her, or the proceeding to be taken, shall be reduced into or stated in writing before such examination be made, and the persons by whom such examination is made shall certify the result thereof to the satisfaction of the registrar. Such certificate may be to the effect following; that is to say,—

"These are to certify that on the — day of —, 18—, before us —, two of the perpetual commissioners appointed for the county of —, for taking the acknowledgments of deeds by married women, pursuant to an act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, intitled 'An Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and for the Substitution of more simple Modes of Assurance,' appeared personally —, the wife of —, and produced a paper writing marked (), bearing date the — day of —, and identified by our signatures. And we do hereby certify that the said — was, at the time of her producing the same paper writing, of full age and competent understanding, and that she was examined by us apart from her husband, touching her knowledge of the contents of the said paper writing, and of the nature and effect of the [application or other act according to the effect of the paper writing] therein mentioned, and that we ascertained that she was acting with respect thereto freely and voluntarily."

The paper writing mentioned in the certificate identified by the signatures of the commissioners making the examination; and the certificate, and a declaration or affidavit verifying the certificate, and the signatures thereto of the parties by whom the same shall purport to be signed, shall be lodged in the office.

Such declaration or affidavit may be to the following effect:—

"I (A. B.), of —, in the county of —, [make oath and say],— "That I know —, the wife of —, in the certificate hereunto annexed mentioned, and that the said certificate was signed by —, of —, and —, of —, the commissioners in the said certificate mentioned, at —, in the county of —, in my presence.

"That to the best of my knowledge or belief, neither of the said commissioners is in any manner interested in the transaction giving occasion for such examination, or concerned therein as attorney, solicitor, or agent, or as clerk to any attorney, solicitor, or agent so interested or concerned."

(Sworn or declared, &c.)

Generally.

28. In case of death, or transmission or change of interest, pending any registration, the proceedings therein shall not abate, but shall be available to the heir, devisee, grantee, or assignee, if he shall think proper to adopt the same.

29. Wherever the word "solicitor" is used in these Orders, the words "attorney or certificated conveyancer" shall be deemed to be included; and the word "affidavit" shall include "statutory declaration."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 10, 1864.

As we remarked in a late number of THE JURIST, the recent discussions on the subject of reports have ventilated a vast number of crude and ill-considered notions, some written, but many more spoken, by men often of good abilities and fair legal knowledge, but without practical experience in the real work of reporting. One very common notion is, that the reporter ought not to publish cases the decision in which is clearly wrong, and every reporter has often been told by the counsel engaged in a cause that the decision is wrong, and ought not to be reported; indeed, a story is commonly related, that Lord Campbell, when asked to explain how it was that the law in the cases reported by him was so uniformly good, pointed to a large drawer full of cases never published as containing bad law. This story we venture to disbelieve; and if it is true, we maintain that Lord Campbell acted on an erroneous view of the functions of a reporter, which are simply to report what takes place, whether right or wrong; for, after all, right and wrong, in the absence of corruption or partiality, is only matter of opinion, and who is the reporter who sets himself up in judgment on the judge? Necessarily he is either comparatively young and inexperienced, or else he is a man who has failed in the profession, for no one would report who could be more profitably employed in business; and on what rational ground can such a man venture to set himself above a judge, who must have been a distinguished barrister, and whose opinion on a point of law would be worth that of half a dozen ordinary reporters?

The reporter must, then, reject this idea, and report every case of novelty or importance; and we now come to the manner in which this is to be done, as to which notions still more crude and ill-considered seem to prevail. For instance, a writer of merit, and a barrister in good practice, whose letter on the subject is annexed to Mr. Daniel's celebrated pamphlet, and whose opinion may, therefore, be supposed to be sanctioned by Mr. Daniel, lays down the following rules for reporting:—Every report is to contain—

1. The parties.
2. The nature of the pleadings.
3. The essential facts.
4. The points contended for by counsel.
5. The grounds on which the judgment is based.
6. The judgment, decree, or order actually pronounced.

Now, of these, 3 and 4 are, of course, self-evident; 5, we presume to mean what is termed the judgment; for unless the judge gives the grounds of his decision, we do not see how they can be supplied; but a little reflection and a very little experience would shew the other three rules to be inapplicable. As to 1, in not one case in ten are either the parties or the pleadings of the smallest consequence. Let us take, for instance, a very common case. A testator gives several legacies, charging them on his real estate, which proves insufficient; a suit is instituted under which the property is sold, and after the cause has been several times before the Court, a question arises as to whether one of these legacies is vested or contingent. Now, there might be twenty or thirty parties to such a suit; it might have been abated a dozen times; and the statement of the parties and pleadings would occupy two or three pages, for no object whatever except to mislead the reader. Instead of inserting all of which we should submit that the proper way to report such a case would be, "This was a suit to administer the estate of A. B., and a question arose upon the following clause in his will, &c." As to the 6th rule, the decree or order in such a case would occupy whole pages, of which only one line, the declaration on the question, would be necessary. Of course, it will be answered, that in such a case the rules would not apply. Then they are not rules at all, and should not be given as such.

Again: reports are regarded in different aspects by different readers. There is—first, the general reader, who reads for the purpose of learning what are the tendencies of the judges, and what has recently been laid down as law—a class of readers which we suspect to be much less numerous than it was; for them, the reports should be brief, and even the judgment should be abridged. Secondly, the reader who wishes to quote the case as an authority, or to explain it away; for him, the report should be much more full, and the judgment, in particular, should be given at length. Lastly, there is the reader who has the same cause on appeal, or who is engaged in the same cause in another branch; for him, nothing can be too full, and he would wish the whole to be printed, parties, pleadings, decree, and all. Between these the reporter has to select; and we should say that he ought to suit something between the first and second classes of readers, and submit to be reproved for his deficiencies by the third class.

We now come to the discussion of what reports ought to be; we are compelled to put aside as unattainable at the present day such reports as those of Mr. Swanston and Mr. Russell, which are not only full, careful, and accurate, but in many instances contain notes more valuable than the case to which they are appended. How these reports were ever compiled, when there were evening sittings at the Rolls as well as morning sittings by the Lord Chancellor, and when each of these learned reporters had a considerable private practice, is a perfect marvel; we can only say, that "there were giants in those days." We must, however, observe, that there was then more encouragement to bring out a careful and good report. Though justice was slow, the cases were fully argued and the judgments well considered; and moreover, when there were but two sets of Chancery reports, a new number of reports was read, and the cases discussed, as if it was a new number of The Quarterly, whereas at present a reporter must, in two cases out of three, feel perfectly aware that no one, unless under the compulsion of a similar case, will ever read one quarter of what he has written. We need not remark how much more fayourable the old system was to the production of lawyers in the profession, and, indeed, among the reporters. Swanston, Turner, Russell, Mylne, and Craig, all attained eminence in the profession, but since the establishment of the additional courts, and the appearance of five sets of reports, no reporter (to express our meaning without giving room for offence) has attained the rank of Queen's Counsel. Leaving, therefore, these reports as unattainable, a report, as we have them at the present day, should of course contain a statement of everything—parties, pleadings, and facts, which is material to make the question and the point decided clear and intelligible; and what is almost of equal importance, but is not equally attended to, should not contain anything which is immaterial. Immaterial statements are not only surplusage and unnecessary, but are positively wrong as tending to lead the reader astray, just as a problem in chess is considered improperly stated if it contains a single man more than is absolutely necessary for its solution. This rule is not always attended to by the learned judges, who, in stating the facts of the case in their judgments, will frequently state, for instance, the parties to a deed, and the devolution of the legal estate, when neither is of the smallest consequence to the right understanding of the case. The arguments are the least difficult, though the references to the cases cited are the most troublesome part of a report, and do not call for any remark. The judgment is, with rare exceptions (those of Lord Cranworth, for instance), the part of the case which requires most discretion, and is the most difficult to handle. With every respect for the learned judges in Chancery, we feel bound to say—and we never heard a difference of opinion on the subject—that the judgments of more than one of them, though able and sound (perhaps the most able and most sound), are extended to an unreasonable and unnecessary length; none but those who are in the habit of seeing the short-hand writers' notes can be aware of the length. Now, to curtail these, and to omit the numerous repetitions and immaterial statements which a learned judge has uttered, requires considerable judgment and courage; in fact, throws upon the reporter a duty which, though absolutely necessary, never ought to be thrown upon him. The remaining part of the report is the marginal note; and this, we submit, ought never (unless there are several independent points in a case) to extend beyond a very few lines. The value of a case is, in general, inversely as the length of its marginal note; and if for any reason it is necessary to give a case which involves many circumstances, the note should avoid the statement of them at length, and proceed by reference; for a long marginal note defeats its own purpose, and becomes useless, as the reader may as well refer to the case itself as to a long note of it.

In fact, the art of reporting properly is by no means easily learnt; and though it may not require a very high order of mind, it does require qualifications which are more rare than would be supposed, and any inexperienced person who attempted it would almost infallibly make a deplorable failure.

It is not very often that the decision of a bench of magistrates is of sufficient importance or significance to merit notice in our columns; but exceptions do sometimes occur, and a recent decision of the magistrates having jurisdiction over Duffield Wold may, we think, fairly be considered one of them. As reported in The Eastern Morning News, the case is as follows:—"Not attending church.—Isaac Watson, servant with Mrs. Harrison, Duffield Wold, was summoned before the Rev. G. S. Clare, the Rev. R. H. Foord, and Mr. J. Grunston, and charged by George Lyon, Mrs. Harrison's manager, with refusing to attend church on Sunday, being requested by his mistress to do so. The defendant was ordered to attend some place of worship, and pay the expenses, 9s. 6d."

We confess to being somewhat startled on reading the above paragraph. The idea, that hundreds of thousands of our fellow subjects, who are in the habit of attending neither church nor chapel, should be liable week by week to fine and imprisonment at the instance of any malicious, or well-meaning but illiberal, person, was anything but an agreeable one. We did not even derive much comfort from the option which the magistrates held out. If compelled to attend any religious service anywhere, we should feel too exasperated at the interference with our liberties as Englishmen, to care much whether the place of our incarceration were a cathedral or a conventicle, or whether the forms used, or doctrines taught, were Episcopal or Mormon. The prominent impression on our mind was, that the whole affair was morally, if not legally, an anachronism—a fragment of the polity and sentiments of the Tudor and Stuart eras, which by some unaccountable accident had been most inopportunately, in this year of grace 1864, revived out of a deathlike trance.

We have no statement as to the ratio decidendi, but can only surmise that the magistrates must have proceeded either on the statutes of the 1 Eliz. c. 2, and the 3 Jac. 1, c. 4, or on the ground that under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, or other statutes in pari materia, which confer jurisdiction on the justices over agricultural labourers, artificers, &c., in respect of their contracts, in those capacities they had power to punish Isaac Watson, as for a breach of his contract of service, or for misconduct or misdemeanour in service in not attending church according to the bidding of his mistress. Neither of the above-suggested reasons is, however, tenable; for the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59 (of which the magistrates were probably unaware), repeals so much of the 1 Eliz. c. 2, "as relates to a person resorting to his parish church or chapel accustomed, or upon reasonable let thereof, to some usual place where common prayer and such service of God, as in such acts are mentioned, are used in such time of let upon Sundays and other days ordained and used to be kept as holydays, and to his then and there abiding orderly and soberly during the time of common prayer, preaching, or other service of God, there used and ministered;" and also repeals the 3 Jac. 1, c. 4, which conferred jurisdiction on a justice of the peace in reference to complaints of non-attendance at church. Neither would the fact of Isaac Watson being under a contract of service as an agricultural labourer support the decision, and for the simple reason, that attendance at public worship is not incidental or ancillary to a contract of service in husbandry.

As not unfrequently happens in cases of harsh decision, the clerical element was largely developed in the constitution of the bench. We really wish that the clergy would confine themselves to their own speciality. The maxim "usque tutor," &c., applies with more than ordinary force to a clergyman assuming the magisterial office. In many points there is a diversity amounting almost to incompatibility in their respective functions; the excellence of the clergyman being, to a great extent, the weakness of the magistrate, and vice versa. How can the parishioners of a magisterial parson, or at least such of them as transgress human law, be expected, as, ex hypothesi, they are expected, to confide their errors and failings to him as an adviser and a friend, when the knowledge so acquired may deeply prejudice them, if, as is only too likely, they should be summoned to appear before him as a clerical magistrate.

Again: the tone of mind required for theological and legal pursuits differs widely; the rationalistic theologian, and the lawyer who is given to take things upon trust, are not generally considered favourable specimens of their respective classes—the latter, certainly, is not, and we venture to affirm never will be.

On the whole, while we appreciate the tender regard of the magistrates of Duffield Wold, for the soul of the benighted hind, Isaac Watson, we think that it is not likely to be benefited either by confiscating his hardly earned wages, or by compelling his bodily presence at church. We shall, also, in the absence of further information, and for the reasons above stated, continue of opinion, that the proceedings against Isaac Watson were not warranted by law, and that the summons ought not to have been granted, or if granted, should have been dismissed at the prosecutor's expense.

PROCEEDINGS ON APPLICATION FOR REGISTRATION WITH AN INDEFEASIBLE TITLE.

BESIDES the GENERAL RULES and ORDERS, which were printed by us last week, the following GENERAL ORDERS, DIRECTIONS, and FORMS have been issued from the office of Land Registry:—

Application for Registration.

"Application for registration of title shall be made in writing, signed by the applicant, or his solicitor on his behalf, and shall state the nature of the interest of the applicant, and a general description, in concise terms, of the property the title to which is proposed to be registered, and whether or not the applicant claims the mines and minerals. It shall also state whether the registration applied for is one with or without an indefeasible title." (1).

* The numerals in brackets denote that the rules after which they are placed form parts, under the like numbers, of the General Orders of the 1st October, 1862.

Forms of application for registration, and all the other

The following persons are, by the 4th section of the act, authorised to apply for registration of title, viz.—

1. The owner in fee-simple.
2. Persons who collectively are owners of the fee-simple, or have the power of acquiring the same.
3. Persons who have the power of appointing the fee-simple.
4. Trustees for sale of the fee-simple.
5. The owner of the first estate of freehold and first vested estate of inheritance.
6. Any purchaser of a fee-simple where his contract empowers him so to do, or the vendor consents.
7. Any person authorised by the Court of Chancery to make such application.

The same section also provides that "application may be made, although the estate of the person applying may be subject to charges and incumbrances."

The application should state several particulars of the property, including its actual or estimated quantity, as may be sufficient to connect it with that comprised in the abstract, to be delivered at the office.

The person desiring to register his title may effect such registration personally, or by a solicitor, attorney, or certificated conveyancer.

The following is a form of application by an owner in fee-simple, viz.—

"LAND REGISTRY.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53.

"[Thomas Hopkins] of [Sevenoaks, in the county of Kent, farmer], being the owner in fee-simple of certain lands in the parish of [Tunbridge, in the] county of [Kent], called or known as [High Beech Farm], containing by estimation [150 acres] or thereabout, and [or but not] the mines and minerals under the same, hereby requires the title to such lands to be registered as an indefeasible title, according to the terms of the said act.

"The address of the said [Thomas Hopkins] for service is [as above], [or, if the application is made through a solicitor, at the office of such solicitor.]

"Dated this — day of —, 18—.

"[Signature of the applicant or his solicitor.]"

If the applicant be not owner in fee-simple, the statement in the application must be altered according to his actual title.

"The application shall be left in the office, and on leaving thereof an appointment shall be made to attend the registrar thereon, who shall determine whether the application shall be proceeded with, and give any special directions he may think necessary for the prosecution thereof." (2).

The application may be left personally, or sent through the post, and if an appointment to attend the registrar be not made on leaving the application, notice will be sent to the applicant when attendance on the registrar is necessary.

On every warrant to attend the registrar, a stamp of 3s. must be affixed.

An abstract.

"Together with, or within such time after the date of the application as the registrar shall fix, an abstract of the title of the applicant shall be left in the office. Such abstract shall be in such form, and contain such information, and be prepared in such manner, in all respects, as the registrar shall from time to time approve or direct." (3).

Where necessary, the time for the delivery of the abstract will be fixed, according to circumstances, in each case. As a general rule, if not delivered with the application, it should be lodged as soon after as possible.

The abstract should be in such form, and contain such information, and be prepared in such manner as that furnished by a vendor to a purchaser, where there are no restrictive conditions as to the title contained in the contract for sale. A stamp of 10s. must be affixed on the abstract.

Abstracts left in the office will be permanently retained therein, unless the registrar shall otherwise direct.

Affidavit verifying Abstract.

"An affidavit satisfactory to the registrar shall be left with the abstract, to the effect that such abstract contains a true abstract of all deeds and writings within the period covered by the abstract, and a true statement of all facts and circumstances relating to or affecting the title to the property, and every part thereof, to the best of the deponent's knowledge, information, and belief, and setting forth the means and sources of such knowledge, information, and belief." (4).

The object of this affidavit is to shew that the abstract is a bonâ fide abstract of the title to the property, and that no document or circumstance affecting the title is kept back. It should be made by the applicant's solicitor or his clerk, or by the applicant himself, or such other person as can best depose to the facts, according to the circumstances of each case. In case of difficulty, the form of the affidavit will be settled in the office.

Swearing Affidavits.

"Affidavits, to be used in the office, may be sworn before the assistant registrar, or a commissioner appointed to take affidavits in the Court of Chancery. The registrar may, if he think fit, require evidence to be given vivâ voce before him, and that any affidavit shall be sworn before him. All affidavits shall be filed in the office, and office copies thereof be taken for use." (33).

A stamp of 1s. 6d. must be affixed to every affidavit sworn in the office, and 1s. to every exhibit verified by oath and marked in the office. A stamp of 2s. 6d. must also be affixed on filing any affidavit.

A statutory declaration may be made instead of an affidavit.

Schedule of Evidence.

"A schedule of all deeds, probates, pedigrees, certificates, receipts, and other documents to be produced in verifying the abstract and deducing the title, together with an exact copy or the original of every map or plan drawn on or referred to in any abstracted document, shall be left with the abstract." (5).

The object of this schedule is to prevent the expense and delay of having to make requisitions, and obtain replies on points of evidence the answers to which are already in the power of the applicant. This schedule must not be a list of the deeds and documents abstracted, but should only contain matters of evidence, certificates, declarations, &c., not set out or referred to in the abstract. No document abstracted should be inserted in this schedule.

A copy, or the original, of every map of the property which may be in the applicant's possession or power will be required to be produced, and should be left with the abstract.

Examination of Abstract.

"All abstracts and copies of documents deposited in the office shall be examined and compared with the original title deeds and documents, and all searches which shall be required to be made by the registrar in the course of the investigation and completion of the title, or with reference to the entry at any time of any title or estate on the register shall be made, by such person and in such manner as the registrar shall direct. Such further or additional abstract and copies of any deeds or instruments shall be made by the applicant and deposited in the office as shall from time to time be required. The costs and expenses of examining and comparing the abstract and copies with the original deeds and documents, and of all searches and all fees to be paid to any examiner of title or conveyancing counsel, shall be settled by the registrar, and be paid by the applicant." (9).

The original deeds and documents referred to in the abstract will be examined and compared therewith by some person appointed by the registrar for that purpose. They may be sent to the office for examination, or, if more convenient, may be produced in the country, or in any part of London. If they are lodged in the office they will, if possible, be examined by the officers of the office, and the fee payable to the office in that case will be at the rate of 5s. an hour. If they are not lodged in the office, or if it is not possible for the officers of the office to examine them, a person will be employed by the registrar to compare and examine them with the abstract, and the charges of the person so employed must be paid by the applicant. The amount will be settled by the registrar if the parties differ.

Examination of Title.

"The registrar shall direct the title to be examined and reported on by one of the examiners of title, or by one of the conveyancing counsel of the Court of Chancery." (10).

When the abstract has been found to be correct, it will be laid before such one of the examiners of title as shall be nominated by the registrar for the purpose. The fee to be paid to the examiner of title on the abstract will be the usual fee paid to conveyancing counsel, and must be paid by the applicant.

The opinion of the examiner of title will be returned to the registrar, and such requisitions as are necessary on the title will be sent from the office to the applicant or his solicitor for his replies; and any question on the requisitions will (unless referred into the judges' chambers) be decided by the registrar or assistant registrar.

"If at any time during the investigation of the title any question, or doubt, or dispute arise, the registrar may require notice to be given to any person interested in such question, or doubt, or dispute, to the effect that the same is to be brought before the registrar, at a time to be mentioned in such notice, for his consideration, and that such person may attend before the registrar at such time by himself, or his solicitor or counsel, and take part in the investigation and settlement of such question, doubt, or dispute. And, at the time mentioned in such notice, such person may attend accordingly, and take part in the discussion and settlement of such question, doubt, or dispute." (14).

The following is a form of the notice required viz. :—

"LAND REGISTRY.

"No. —.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and of the Application of A. B.

"TAKE NOTICE, that on the investigation of the title to the lands in the parish of —, in the county of —, an application for the registration of the title to which has been made by A. B., of —, a question has arisen as to [here insert nature of question], AND TAKE NOTICE, that such question will be brought before the registrar, at the office of Land Registry, on the — day of —, at — o'clock, for his consideration, and that you may attend before the registrar at such time and place, by yourself, or your solicitor or counsel, and take part in the investigation and settlement of such question.

"Dated this — day of —, 18—.

"[Signature of the applicant or his solicitor.]

"To —, of —."

Proceedings under this Order are not taken except at the request of the applicant.

Under the 6th section of the act any question, doubt, or dispute as to any matter of title that may arise in the course of investigating the title may, if the applicant wishes, be referred to the judge of the Court of Chancery.

Maps and Description of Parcels.

"An accurate map or plan of the property shall be deposited in the office when directed. Such map or plan shall be made in such form, and on such scale, and in such manner in all respects as shall from time to time be directed, and shall contain the names of all the owners and occupiers of the lands bounding or immediately adjoining the property." (7).

"A full and complete schedule or description of the property shall also be made and deposited in the office at such time, and made in such form as shall be directed for that purpose. Such schedule or description shall contain, besides the full particulars of the property, all the boundaries thereof, together with the names and addresses of all the owners and occupiers of lands adjoining to, and forming the boundaries thereof, and the persons, other than owners (if any), receiving rents of such adjoining lands, so far as the same can be ascertained, and the name and address of the lord of the manor, if the lands are situate within or held of any manor." (8).

The word "occupiers" in these two Orders may be read as "tenants."

The map and description there referred to must shew the present actual state and condition of the property. They may be left with the abstract, and if not, notice will be given to the applicant of the time when the same will be required to be deposited. They will not in ordinary cases be required until after the title has been examined, and has been shewn to be satisfactory.

The map may be a copy of any recent and correct estate or parish map, or of the tithe map, if on a sufficiently large scale to insure accuracy. One series of closes round the boundaries of the property should, when practicable, be shewn upon the map, and the exact position of the boundaries claimed, whether centre or side of road, fence, stream, &c., or otherwise, should be defined on the map, either in writing or by initial letters. The names of the owners and tenants or occupiers of the adjoining lands should also be written upon the map. The map and description should refer to each other by numbers. Lands situated in different parishes should be distinguished on the map and entered separately in the description.

The tithe maps are lodged in the Map Department of the Copyhold Inclosure and Tithe Commission, No. 3, St. James's-square, S.W., under the charge of Lieutenant-Colonel Leach, R.E., the head of that department. Copies of these maps may be obtained on application at that office, at a small cost*. If there be no map available of the property, it will be necessary that one should be prepared. In that case, as well as in all other cases where there may be any difficulty with reference to the map of the property, it will be desirable to seek the advice and assistance of Colonel Leach, on the ground both of economy and accuracy.

* The cost of tracings of maps of ordinary rural districts varies from 1s. to 2s. 6d. per 100 acres. If the tracing embraces a town or large village, or the area is small, an addition to this charge will be made in proportion to the increased labour of the draftsman.

SHIPPING LAW.

In 8vo., price 20s. cloth, lettered.

THE SHIPPING LAW MANUAL: a concise Treatise on the Law governing the Interests of Shipowners, Merchants, Masters, Seamen, and other Persons connected with British Ships. Together with the Acts of Parliament, Forms, and Precedents relating to the subject. Being especially intended for popular use in Seaport Towns. By W. T. GREENHOW, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"The 'Shipping Law Manual,' by Mr. W. T. Greenhow, brings into a popular shape, and to the latest date, the entire body of legal regulations affecting the shipping trade of the country alike in relation to owners, merchants, masters, and seamen, and is especially adapted for ordinary use by all persons connected with the business of seaport towns."—Times, Jan. 31, 1863.

"The object of the author of this book is to popularise the Law of Merchant Shipping, and to compress within the compass of a single volume all that is necessary to be known by those directly interested in British navigation. It was no easy task to condense and arrange this mass of legislation, so as to make it intelligible to the general reader. But Mr. Greenhow has achieved it, and placed within reach of every one connected with shipping a valuable compendium of the law relating to that branch of industry."—Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 17, 1864.

As the Divorce Court has now been in operation for nearly seven years, there has been abundant time to form an opinion as to the wisdom of the Legislature in passing the statute which created the Court, and as to the benefit which the facility afforded by it, of obtaining a dissolution of marriage, has conferred upon society. But in this, as in most other subjects on which important interests are involved, there will be found to be a wide difference of opinion. While all agree that if divorce is to be allowed, it ought to be practicable for the poor equally with the rich, and that the previous state of things was a virtual denial of justice to the poor man, and even to the man of moderate means, some will say that there ought to be no power of divorce, that death only should dissolve the marriage tie; others will say that the establishment of the Court was a most expedient measure, and that the increased facility of obtaining a dissolution of marriage and the publicity of the proceedings, operate as a warning and terror to those who would otherwise break their marriage vows.

It is, indeed, difficult to say that a husband should not be freed from an adulterous wife, or a wife from an adulterous and cruel husband; but when we consider the style of remark that is everywhere heard upon the proceedings of the Court, the levity with which the subject of divorce is discussed, and the constant publication of indecencies, which are proved in the cases before the Court, the mind does lean to the conclusion that these things should not be, and that it would be better that there should be no divorce than that adultery should become a subject of coarse joking and prurient curiosity—that it would be better there should be no divorce than that a woman should commit adultery in the expectation and hope of being divorced from her husband and marrying the adulterer. It was said that the late learned judge of the Court expected a light place and easy work when he was appointed, and that he was amazed at the crowd of business, which would have overwhelmed a less able and diligent man. This crowd of work was originally attributed to the arrears of adulteries, and to the natural consequence of the creation of the Court—that those whose means had hitherto prevented them from putting in force the expensive method which previously existed, would seek relief in the new Court of Divorce; but these arrears have been now cleared off, and yet the number of cases rather increases than diminishes, and there seems no probability of a decrease. In fact, as the population increases, it can only be expected that the number of cases will increase in proportion; for reason as we may on the deterring influence of punishment and publicity which the Divorce Court creates, those influences only exist in theory. No one can say that the existence of the Court for the past seven years has had the effect of diminishing adultery. Those who support the present facility of divorce will naturally ask the question whether, if it were abolished, a husband is to be tied for life to an adulterous wife, or a wife to an adulterous and cruel husband, and whether impunity would not promote the offence. Now, we think there is a great difference between the consequences of an entire dissolution of a marriage and a judicial separation. In the former case the wife looks to a future union with her paramour, and is led on by the hope of its taking place; in the latter, she would be separated from her husband and her children, and feel the bitter consequences of her sin, without being able to retrieve her character in any degree by a marriage with the adulterer or with any other man. Hard as it may be upon a husband not to be entirely free from such a wife, still it is the welfare of society that must first be considered; and we are inclined to think that it would be better to abolish divorce and to maintain judicial separation. The reflection that marriage is a tie for life might deter from adultery, and from the conduct—neglect or cruelty, or whatever it may be—that leads to adultery.

If, however, the facility of divorce, once established, can never be repealed, at least, the question whether it may not be wholesome and good for society partially to alter the law, deserves consideration; and we think it would be wise, at least, to repeal the 57th section of the statute (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), which runs thus:—"When the time hereby limited for appealing against any decree dissolving a marriage shall have expired, and no appeal shall have been presented against such decree, or when any such appeal shall have been dismissed, or when, in the result of any appeal, any marriage shall be declared to be dissolved, but not sooner, it shall be lawful for the respective parties thereto to marry again, as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death; provided always, that no clergyman in holy orders of the united Church of England and Ireland shall be compelled to solemnise the marriage of any person whose former marriage may have been dissolved, on the ground of his or her adultery, or shall be liable to any suit, penalty, or censure for solemnising, or refusing to solemnise, the marriage of any such person."

If this section were repealed, and the parties convicted of adultery could not intermarry, there might be a strong inducement on the part of the wife to abstain from conduct which condemns her to hopeless shame. Such intermarriage is forbidden by the law of Scotland, and by the law of France. The section was earnestly discussed when the bill was passing through Parliament, and most powerful arguments urged, but in vain, against it. Still there is no reason why it should not be struck out of the statute. We cannot but think that ere long the state of the law of divorce, and the effect the Court has had upon society, will be considered by the Legislature. In order to supply the proper materials for such consideration, that should be done, which, it is surprising to say, has not yet been done—there should be statistics of the proceedings of the Court, the number of cases in each year since its institution, the rank in life of the parties, and especially the number of wives convicted of adultery, who, by reason of having had settlements made upon them, were, to a certain extent, independent of their husbands, and so free from the fear of want if their marriage was dissolved. We have heard it said that there have been many cases of this kind; and although a later statute gives the judge power over a settlement where there are children, he cannot deal with it where there are none. There might be no means of ascertaining in how many cases the wife has intermarried with the adulterer, but we do not think we are wrong in saying that they are numerous.

With these statistics before them, the Legislature might form an opinion upon the operation of the Court on the interests of society, and on the question whether the law requires alteration. The subject is of such vital importance that we trust these statistics will be collected and seriously considered. Everybody will admit that a husband or wife ought, to a certain extent, be relieved from an adulterous partner; but the question is, whether the impossibility of obtaining that absolute relief, which enables the parties to remarry, might not act in many cases as a check. Whether in fact a judicial separation should be the utmost amount of relief which could be obtained.

Whether or not the law is ever altered in this respect, we think there is another point on which it requires to be reviewed, namely, the subject of condonation by a wife. The recent case of Hopley v. Hopley must have attracted the notice of many of our readers, and suggested the thought that it was hard upon the wife to treat her conduct, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, as amounting to a condonation of the cruelty. The doctrine of condonation, as applied to the wife, is, no doubt, totally different from that which is applied to the husband; great allowance is made for the situation in which she is placed—perhaps, not having the means of leaving her husband, often unwilling to push matters to extremities, or unable to force herself to part from her children. All these considerations are taken into account on the question of condonation by the wife; and it may be urged, that unless there is to be no such thing as condonation on her part, the latitude which the law allows at present in her favour is quite sufficient, and ought not to be increased, because in this or that particular case, a jury have come to a wrong conclusion upon the evidence. But the case to which we have alluded, shews that there may be apparent proofs of forgiveness of cruelty by the wife, but that it is impossible to believe them to be sincere, and that the fact of her seeking a judicial separation shews that they were not sincere. Long delay in applying to the Court, if unexplained, should, no doubt, deprive her of her remedy; but we question whether any other acts on her part, even those which are usually treated as proofs of affection, should be a bar.

SINCE the publication of the article in the last week's JURIST, we have learnt, from a correspondence on the subject between the Marquis Townshend and Sir George Grey, published in The Daily Telegraph, of the 5th instant, that the proceedings were taken under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34.

This statute, even when legally and properly interpreted, is sufficiently harsh, and is capable of being made an engine of great oppression, but this novel application of it is one for which the magistrates, and not the act, must be held responsible. The 3rd section enacts, "that if any servant in husbandry, or any artificer, . . . potter, labourer, or other person, shall contract with any person or persons whomsoever, to serve him, her, or them for any time or times whatsoever, or in any other manner, . . . having entered into such service, shall neglect to fulfil the same, or be guilty of any other misconduct or misdemeanour in the execution thereof, or otherwise respecting the same, . . . it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace of &c., and such justice of the peace is hereby authorised and empowered, upon complaint thereof made upon oath, . . . to issue his warrant for the apprehending every such servant in husbandry," &c. It is clear, that the words "other person," following the classes specified, apply only to persons following occupations of a similar description; domestic or menial servants are not within the act. (See Jones v. Williams, 3 B. & Cr. 762). In our opinion, the contract, the non-performance of which, or the misconduct or misdemeanour in relation to which, is relied on, must be a contract having special reference to service in some of the employments mentioned in the act; and the duty, the breach of which is to be punished by the justices, must be a duty properly arising out of a contract for service in such employments, and have some clear and natural relation to it, and not be something merely collateral. Attendance at church, however important, being a matter totally distinct from the duty of an agricultural servant, as such, towards his employer, we regard the question of there being or not being at the time of the hiring an express stipulation for Isaac Watson's attendance at church as totally immaterial.

CASE OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.—At the Judges' Chambers on Tuesday, the 14th, Mr. Chitty applied on the part of Frederick Insoll, a prisoner in Hereford Gaol, to put in bail to prosecute an appeal at the quarter sessions, under extraordinary circumstances. Insoll was a bankrupt, and a tenant of a Mr. Masfield; he removed his goods away from the place, and was summoned before justices in petty sessions at Ledbury, and committed under the act of the 11 Geo. 2, passed in 1738, for two months, for fraudulently depriving the landlord of his rent by distress. He stated that he was a bankrupt, and protected: on which the justices held, that he had no goods to distrain upon, and committed him for two months, although the act stated, that an offender should be committed for six months to hard labour. The commitment was made on the 11th August, and on the 30th August an application was made on his behalf to Mr. Justice Shee, on the ground that the commitment was bad. His Lordship, however, refused to interfere, and the facts were brought under his notice on an application to put in bail to prosecute an appeal. Mr. Butterworth, on the other side, contended that the application was made too late, and under the act in question, the order having been executed, and the time more than half expired, it could not be granted. Mr. Chitty said an application had been made to the justices a few days since, and they held, it was "too late." He, however, contended that, under a case he cited, an application might be made before the expiration of the imprisonment. It was a monstrous case, and, according to a recent case which had been reported in the newspapers, a bankrupt was entitled to his protection from a debt, and the commitment could be got rid of by paying a sum of money. Mr. Justice Shee considered the act of Parliament and the authorities cited. His Lordship held, that as the order had been executed, he could not interfere. Mr. Chitty intimated that other proceedings would be adopted in the matter.

PROCEEDINGS ON APPLICATION FOR REGISTRATION WITH AN INDEFEASIBLE TITLE.

The following form of schedule or description is now generally used in the office:—

"No. ———.

LAND REGISTRY.

See the 8th of the General Orders In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and of the Application of ———.
of the 1st October, 1862.

DESCRIPTION of the LANDS forming the Estate known as ———, in the Parish of ———,
and County of ———.

Numbers on the Map sent to the Office.	Numbers on Title, Inclosure, Parish, or other Public Map.	Names of Farms, and Names and Description of Closes.	Area in Statute Measure.	Names and Addresses of Tenants or Occupiers.	Under what Lease or Agreement held, and the Date, and for what Term.	Name and Address of Tenants or Occupiers, Owners, and Persons (if any) other than Owners to whom Rent is paid, of Lands bounding the Estate, to be inserted opposite Closes which adjoin the Boundary.			Remarks.
						Tenants or Occupiers.	Owners.	Person, if any other than Owners, to whom Rent is paid.
			A. R. P.

NOTE.—If any part of the estate to be registered, or any part of the adjoining boundary land, is held of, or situate within any manor, the name and address of the lord should be given. Lands held under different titles, or situate in different parishes, should be kept distinct. Mines and minerals, if claimed, should be specifically mentioned or described. If the property consists of houses in towns, the names of the street and numbers should be given. All rights of way and water, or other easements, disputed boundaries (if any), or any matter of liability affecting any of the lands to be registered, should be stated.

[Signature of the applicant or his solicitor.]”

The description of the land furnished by the applicant must be satisfactorily identified with the parcels or description contained in the title deeds, pursuant to the 10th section of the act, and must, if required by the registrar, be verified by oath, under the 8th section.

Surveys and Notices.

“The registrar may require that the description, quantities, and boundaries of the lands, and the accuracy of any map or plan, be investigated and ascertained by some person nominated and appointed by himself, who shall, at the expense of the applicant, make such surveys, and such investigations and inquiries, on or in the neighbourhood of the lands, or otherwise, as the registrar shall require. Such notices shall be given of such surveys, investigations, and inquiries, in such form and to such persons as the registrar shall direct, and the applicant shall pay the expenses of such surveys, investigations, and inquiries, to such person, and in such manner, and to such amount, as the registrar shall from time to time direct.” (11).

This investigation, which will in no case be required before the registrar is satisfied with the title, is to avoid encroachment upon the lands of adjoining owners. For this purpose, the assistance of the Map Department of the Copyhold, Inclosure, and Tithe Commission has been obtained, and the map and description furnished by the applicant will be sent to that department, where they will be examined, under the direction of Colonel Leach, to ascertain that they correspond with each other, and accurately represent the property†.

Except in cases where the registrar shall think such a course unnecessary, a person will be sent to the property itself, to verify the boundaries, and to ascertain that they are accurately defined upon the map; and in that case, the applicant must provide some intelligent person, well acquainted with the property, to accompany the person making such investigation*. And to afford the owners and occupiers or tenants of adjoining lands, and the trustees of boundary roads, protection against encroachments, notice will generally be required to be given to them of such investigation, that they may attend to assist in verifying boundaries, and to give any necessary information; and notice will also generally be required to be given to the principal tenants or occupiers of such parts of the lands proposed to be registered as form the boundaries of the property. The notices must be prepared by the applicant, and after being settled in the office and stamped with its seal, should be served by him. Not less than seven days’ notice should be given.

hour, according to the time actually occupied. The time required will probably vary from a few hours to two or three days, according to the degree of care and accuracy with which the documents have been prepared by the applicant, and the extent and character of the property.

* The charge of the person making the investigation will not exceed the rate of one guinea per diem, and his actual travelling expenses. The time occupied will depend upon the character, extent, and intricacy of the property, the distance travelled to the locality, the completeness of the documents furnished, the diligence used by the parties interested, and the facilities and information afforded to the person employed. A compact rural property of 500 acres should not, under ordinary circumstances, occupy more than one or two days.

* By a mistake in our last number, the folio was printed 585 instead of 365.

† The expense of this will be after the rate of 2s. 6d. per

The following is the form of notice of survey used in the office, viz.:—

"Notice of Survey.

"LAND REGISTRY.

"No. —.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and of the Application of [Thomas Hopkins, of Sevenoaks, in the county of Kent, farmer.]

"Take notice, that the registrar has directed a surveyor to attend on the — day of — next, on the [lands in the parish of Tunbridge, in the county of Kent, called or known as High Beech Farm.] at — o'clock in the — noon, to survey and perambulate the boundaries of the same for the purposes of registration under the provisions of the above act.

"And notice is hereby given to you, in order that you may attend the said survey and perambulation, and point out to the said surveyor the boundaries of the said property and any other matters material to the registration, to the end that such boundaries may be duly inquired into and correctly defined, and the property correctly represented by him in such survey and on the map of the said premises, to be settled for the purposes of registration.

"Dated this — day of —.

"[Signature of the applicant or his solicitor.]"

Services of Notices.

"All notices required by the act or these Orders to be served shall be under the seal of the office." (39).

For every notice under the seal of the office a stamp of 1s. must be paid.

"Services of notice through the General Post-office shall be deemed good service, if the registrar shall so direct." (40).

If the service be personal it must be proved by affidavit; it must also be proved that the persons served are in fact the proper parties. If the service be through the post-office, it should be made by registered letters, and in such case there must be an affidavit verifying the names and addresses of the persons to be served, and the fact that they fill the characters represented; and open envelopes, duly addressed, and containing notices under the seal of the office, should be left at the office for postage, together with the amount of such postage.

If there should be any doubt as to who should be served with notice, or if the persons should be very numerous, or there should be any other difficulty, the registrar will, on application to him, give the necessary directions for the service.

"Substituted service on the solicitor, attorney, or agent of any party shall be deemed good service on such party, if the registrar shall so direct." (42).

Map for Deposit in Office.

When the survey and investigation have been completed a fair copy of the map as settled, with a terrier containing the names and area, &c. of the several closes written on the margin thereof, will be prepared at the office of the Copyhold Inclosure and Tithe Commission for deposit by the applicant in the office, as part of the description of the property. Such fair copy map will, unless materially altered, in consequence of claims made after the advertisement of the intention to register the property so as to render a fresh copy necessary, ultimately be permanently deposited in the office as part of the description of the property*.

* The cost of maps on mounted paper, proper for this purpose, varies from 1d. to 2d. per acre; but if the map embraces a town or large village, or is of house property, or the Particulars required by the 7th Section of the Act.

"The particulars required by the 7th section of the act shall be furnished by the applicant in writing, in such form as the registrar shall direct; and any objections made by the applicant to the settlement thereof by the registrar shall also be made in writing and left in the office within such time as shall be appointed for that purpose. On such objections being left an appointment shall be obtained for attendance before the registrar for his consideration thereof." (13).

The particulars under the 7th section should be furnished as soon as the registrar is satisfied with the title to the land, and the description and map have been settled and approved in draft. They will consist of—

1. The "exact description of the lands."

This should be prepared from the draft description, as the same shall have been previously settled by the before-mentioned investigation, and should in form consist of a general description of the property, with reference to the map prepared at the office of the Tithe Commission and deposited by the applicant in this office.

2. "A statement of the persons or classes or descriptions of persons (if any) that are or may become entitled, and of the estates, &c."

This statement should contain the particulars as the same appear from the investigation of the title, and are admitted by the applicant, or if any questions arising with reference thereto have been previously decided, then according as the same shall have been so decided.

3. "A statement of the mortgages, &c."

This statement should contain the mortgages, &c., as they appear from the investigation of title, and are admitted or have been decided to exist.

In the simple case of the applicant being the owner subject to a mortgage in fee, and claiming the mines and minerals, his wife being barred of dower by declaration, the particulars may be in the following form; in other cases the form must be altered to meet the particular circumstances:—

"Particulars under the 7th Section of the Act.

"LAND REGISTRY.

"No. —.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and of the Application of —, of —, in the County of —.

"The following are the particulars required by the 7th section of the above-mentioned act to be furnished to the registrar:—

"1. 'Description of the lands to be registered.'

"All those hereditaments called or known as —, in the parish of —, in the county of —, containing by admeasurement —, or thereabout, in the occupation of —, bounded on or towards [state the boundaries], and delineated on the map No. —, deposited by the said —, in the office of Land Registry as part of the description of the same hereditaments, and thereon edged with —, together with the mines and minerals under the same hereditaments.

"2. 'Statement of the persons or classes, or description of persons that are or may become entitled to such lands, and of the estates and interests that exist or area is small, an addition to these charges would be made in proportion to the increased labour of the draftsman; and in cases of extraordinary or unforeseen difficulty, it is possible that charges somewhat larger than those previously mentioned may have to be made.

may arise or become vested in such persons respectively."

"The said — is entitled to the before-mentioned hereditaments for an estate of inheritance in fee-simple in possession, subject only to the incumbrance hereinafter mentioned.

"The said — was not married before the year 1834 to a wife now living, and has by deed declared that his widow (if any) shall not be entitled to dower.

"3. 'Statement of the mortgages, charges, and incumbrances affecting such lands, or any part thereof, and of the persons entitled thereto, both at law and in equity.'

"By deed, dated the — day of —, the — before-mentioned hereditaments were conveyed to —, of —, in fee, by way of mortgage, to secure the sum of — and interest, and the said sum, with some interest thereon, is now due to the said —.

"[Signature of the applicant or his solicitor.]"

Unless, in the description of the lands, the mines and minerals are expressly claimed, they will, pursuant to the 9th section of the act, be deemed not to be included in the property to be registered.

If the registrar shall not acquiesce in the particulars furnished, he will make such alterations therein as he shall think proper, and in that case, if the applicant shall object to the alterations, the course of proceeding is pointed out by the 7th section of the act, and the above Order.

The 7th section of the act provides, that any objection to the settlement by the registrar of the above particulars, if not allowed by the registrar, shall, at the request of the applicant, be referred to and decided by the judge of the Court of Chancery.

Security for Costs and Expenses.

"The applicant shall, when required by the registrar, secure the payment of any costs or expenses, by the undertaking in writing of himself or his solicitor, or by deposit of money, as the registrar may from time to time direct." (12).

Advertisements and Service of Copies.

"Before any title is registered, notice of the intention to register the same shall be given by advertisement in one London and one local newspaper at least, and in more newspapers if the registrar shall so direct, and also in colonial and foreign newspapers, if the registrar shall think it necessary or desirable. Such advertisement shall be repeated as often as the registrar shall direct. Such notice shall contain, besides the particulars required by the 11th and 12th sections of the act, such other particulars as shall be deemed necessary. Notice of the intention to register shall be served on such of the tenants and occupiers of the land as the registrar shall direct." (General Order, 15th January, 1865).

The 15th of the General Orders of the 1st October, 1862, has been cancelled, and the above Order has been made in substitution thereof.

"The form of such notices shall be settled and approved by the registrar before the same be advertised or served, and a tracing or copy of the map or plan of the land, or of any part or parts thereof, shall be attached to such notices for service, or any of them, if the registrar shall so direct. Satisfactory proof shall be given of the publication and service of such notices." (16).

When the statement under the 7th section has been settled, the notice to be advertised of the intended registration must be prepared by the applicant. The 11th section of the act provides that the registrar "shall require such notices as General Orders shall direct to be given, by public advertisement, of his intention to register such lands, with an indefeasible title at the expiration of a period of not less than three months from the date of such advertisement." And the 12th section enacts, that "such notice shall contain a copy of the description of the land, as proposed to be registered, and the names and descriptions of the applicants for registration;" and that "the notice shall also state the place, time, and manner at and in which any party may be heard to shew cause against such registration."

The following form of advertisement or notice is that now generally used in the office, viz. :—

"OFFICE OF LAND REGISTRY.

"No. —.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53.

"Notice is hereby given, that on the application of [Thomas Hopkins, of Sevenoaks, in the county of Kent, farmer], the registrar of the office of Land Registry intends, at the expiration of three calendar months from the date hereof, to register with an indefeasible title, all [those hereditaments called or known as High-beech Farm, in the parish of Tunbridge, in the county of Kent, containing by admeasurement 150 acres, or thereabout, in the occupation of William Brown], and delineated on the map, No. —, deposited by the applicant in the office of Land Registry, as part of the description of the same hereditaments, and thereon edged with — [together with the mines and minerals under the same hereditaments].

"If any person objects to, or desires to shew cause against, such registration, or claims that the same should be subject to any conditions or reservations, or that any particular estate or incumbrance, charge, or liability, not already proved or admitted before the registrar, should be entered on the register with reference to such hereditaments, such person may be heard at the office of Land Registry, No. 34, Lincoln's-inn-fields, at any time before the expiration of the said three calendar months from the date hereof, personally, or by his solicitor or counsel, or by affidavit or otherwise, to make such objection to, or to shew cause against, or to make such claim in respect of, such registration. But any person desiring to make such objection or claim, must lodge the same in writing, stating the particulars thereof, and with his name and address thereto, in the office of Land Registry, before the expiration of the said three calendar months from the date hereof, otherwise he will be excluded from making the same.

"The said map of the said hereditaments deposited in the office of Land Registry may be inspected at the said office at any time before the expiration of the said three calendar months from the date hereof.

"Dated this — day of —, 18—.

"[Signature of the chief clerk, and of the applicant or his solicitor.]"

The advertisement or notice, when prepared, must be left in the office to be settled by the registrar, who will direct in what papers it shall be advertised. Generally, it will have to be inserted once in one London and one local paper. The advertisement of the notice must be proved by the production of the newspapers containing the same, which should be sent to the office immediately after their publication. The notices for service, and the parties on whom such service is to be made, and the mode of service, must also be settled by the registrar, and application should be made to him for that purpose.

The 12th section of the act provides that "a copy of such notice shall be served on every adjoining occupier; and the person (if any) to whom such occupier pays rent, and on the lord of the manor, in any case in which the lands are situate within or held of any manor, and also on every person, not having already had notice of the application, who shall appear to have or claim any estate or interest in or right over the land, or any part thereof, and on such other persons as under the special circumstances of each case shall be deemed necessary." The word "occupier" in this section may be read as "tenant." Service may, if the registrar think fit, be made through the general post.

Tracings of the boundaries of the property, so far as they affect the respective adjoining owners, will in most cases be required to be attached to the notices served on them. The tracings will be prepared at the office of the Tithe Commission.

All the notices provided for by the 12th section of the act must be prepared, settled, and served, and the service verified, in like manner as the notices of surveys.

* For the cost of tracings, see ante, note, p. 355.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 24, 1864.

ALTHOUGH it does not often appear in legal reports, judges, not only those who court popularity, but the very best of them, are in the habit of reproving the suitors, and still more strongly their legal advisers, whenever the matter in dispute is trifling, or the amount in dispute small. No doubt, there is an appearance of reason in this habit, and the temptations to adopt it are strong. In the first place, the judge thereby places himself on a lofty Olympian pinnacle, whence he calmly surveys, and in the plenitude of his wisdom reproves the follies of those below him. In other cases, only one side is wrong; here both are wrong, and his superiority is incontestable. In the next place, it is a popular proceeding, and generally carries with it the sympathies of the audience; for, of course, the greater part of the blame falls on the legal adviser, and any censure of so unpopular a class is sure to meet with approbation and applause. Thirdly, both parties have, in all probability, been wrong in one sense of the word; that is to say, they have not consulted their own pecuniary interests, and so far the judge's position is unassailable. But when the matter is analysed, is it so certain that the judge is altogether right, and the suitors are altogether wrong? Of course, in the large majority of suits for small amounts the parties are influenced far more by passion than by reflection, and would have acted more wisely in submitting to the wrong, or fancied wrong; but even then they have been guilty of no moral delinquency; and what has the judge to do with the mere wisdom or folly of their conduct? He may hope by his administration of the law, and his reproof of evil-doers, to diminish moral delinquencies, but cannot hope to produce any effect upon the mass of human folly. Moreover, each party thinks himself to be in the right; and what business has a judge to tell a man who fancies himself, and who may prove to be, in the right, that he ought to have abandoned a just claim, or have given up the object unjustly demanded, sooner than bring his cause before the judge, whose duty and employment it is to deal with such matters? On the contrary, looking at the question from a judicial point of view, we should have imagined that a man would be considered to be doing his duty as a citizen in resisting injustice and promoting justice by all the means in his power; and if in so doing he incurs loss, he would be considered rather as a patriot than as an evil-doer. Whatever private opinion a judge may form as to the wisdom or folly of those who come before him as plaintiffs or defendants, how can he, sitting as a judge, blame them for having confidence in the law as administered by him? Is he prepared to lay down, that a man had better submit to any wrong, not utterly ruinous, than have recourse to the tribunals and judge, whose function it is to protect right and punish wrong?

It is commonly reported of a learned judge in the last century that he used to say, that sooner than involve himself in legal proceedings he would give up a piece of his land, though claimed by a stranger who had no title whatever, provided that no one else knew anything of the transaction. And perhaps he would be right, under any existing or possible system of law, so far as his own immediate interests were concerned. It is, however, impossible to lay down any general rule on the subject, and in each case the party injured must judge for himself as to the expediency of resistance, by taking into account the amount of loss; and also the probable consequences of submission. But though the cost even of successful litigation may be ten, or fifty, or a hundred times as great as the amount in dispute, there are cases in which resistance would be unquestionably prudent or patriotic. No one, for instance, ever considered Hampden foolish for his obstinate resistance to the payment of a very small sum assessed upon him for ship money; and, as we have before observed, of all men a judge should be the last to denounce the prosecution or defence of a just right.

There remains, of course, the question as to the conduct of the legal advisers of the parties, who are frequently excepted from judicial censure in such cases, though, perhaps, more nominally than really. To the best of our belief, litigation is very seldom encouraged by the legal advisers in either branch of the legal profession. The barristers have very little to do with it, and the solicitors, even supposing no higher motives to operate, are, as a matter of fact, not so very fond of litigation, which frequently loses the client, from obvious reasons, when the litigation has been unsuccessful, and from wrath at the extra bill of costs when it has been successful. It is usually, however, supposed that the legal advisers could have stopped their clients, and no doubt in an enormous number of cases they could, and do so; and it is only in the few cases where they cannot that the matter comes before the judge. What, then, is the legal adviser to do when he believes his client to be right, but that the expense of the litigation would exceed the matter in dispute, and his client persists in going on? If it is the duty of a right-minded practitioner to refuse his assistance, he necessarily in all such cases drives the client to practitioners who are not right-minded—a result which can hardly be desired or aimed at, and the only alternative, therefore, is to go on after having fairly represented the case to his client.

We, therefore, come to the conclusion, that in no case ought a judge to find fault with the suitors themselves merely on account of the insignificant amount in dispute; and that he has no right to find fault with their legal advisers unless he has reason to believe that they encouraged, or did not discourage, the litigation.

PROCEEDINGS ON APPLICATION FOR REGISTRATION WITH AN INDEFEASIBLE TITLE.

(Concluded from p. 364).

Notice to Tenants and Incumbrancers.

Before or when any property is advertised for registration, notice of the intention to register must be given also to the tenants and incumbrancers of the property, and such notices must be prepared, settled, and served, and the service verified, in like manner as the other notices before provided for.

The following are the forms of notices to tenants and incumbrancers used in the office, viz. :—

Notice to Tenants of Intention to register.

"LAND REGISTRY.

"No. ———.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and of the Application of [Thomas Hopkins].

"Take notice, that it is the intention of the registrar, on the application of [Thomas Hopkins, of Sevenoaks, in the county of Kent, farmer], to register the title to* [certain hereditaments known as Highbeech Farm, in the parish of Tunbridge, in the county of Kent, of which it is stated that you are tenant, under a lease dated the 19th June, 1860, for a term of twenty-one years from the 24th June, 1860, at the yearly rent of 200*l.*] And that if you claim any interest therein, other than as such tenant as aforesaid, you must lodge your claim† in writing, stating full particulars thereof, at the office of Land Registry, 34, Lincoln's-inn-fields, on or before the ——— day of ———.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and of the Application of [Thomas Hopkins].

"Take notice, that on the investigation of the title to‡ [certain hereditaments known as Highbeech Farm, in the parish of Tunbridge, in the county of Kent], application for the registration of the title to which has been made by [Thomas Hopkins, of Sevenoaks, in the county of Kent, farmer], it appears that you are interested in such hereditaments under, or by virtue of §, [a deed dated the 2nd day of December, 1861, made between the said Thomas Hopkins of the one part, and William Brown, of Cheapside, in the city of London, stationer, of the other part, by which the said hereditaments were conveyed to the said William Brown in fee by way of mortgage to secure the sum of 1000*l.*, and interest.]

"And take notice, that it is the intention of the registrar, in registering the title to the aforesaid hereditaments, to register the same, subject to the aforesaid incumbrance; and that if you claim to have any interest in the said hereditaments other than under, or by virtue of, such incumbrance as aforesaid, and in respect of the moneys thereby expressed to be secured and now owing, or if the particulars of such incumbrance are not correctly stated above, or if, for any other reason, you object to such registration, you must lodge your claim or objection||, in respect thereof, in writing, stating the particulars of your claim or objection, at the office of Land Registry, 34, Lincoln's-inn-fields, on or before the ——— day of ———.

"Dated this ——— day of ———.

"[Signature of the applicant or his solicitor.]

"[To the above-named William Brown.]"

* Here insert short description of lands proposed to be registered, and of the interest of the particular tenant therein.

† N.B. The claim should bear the same number as this notice.

‡ Here insert short description of land proposed to be registered.

§ Here insert particulars of incumbrance.

|| N.B.—The claim or objection should bear the same number as the notice.

If the last-mentioned notices are not given before the advertisement is published, a copy of the advertisement should accompany every such notice.

Objections to Registration.

"If any person shall object to the registration, or claim that the same shall be subject to any condition, qualification, exception, or reservation, such person shall make such objection or claim in writing, and the same shall be signed by the person making the same, or his solicitor, and contain an address in Great Britain at which service on him shall be made, and such objection or claim shall be left at the office before the expiration of the time limited by the notice for such purpose. But the time for leaving such objection or claim may be enlarged by the registrar if he shall so think fit." (17).

The following are forms of objections and claims respectively :—

"LAND REGISTRY.

"No. ———.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and of the Application of A. B.

"E. F., of ———, hereby gives notice that he objects to the registration of the title to the lands known as ——— [or, in the occupation of ———, or otherwise identified], situate in the parish of ———, in the county of ———, notice of the intention to register which has been given by public advertisement [or served on him, as the case may be.]

"The nature of his objection is [here state nature of objection.]

"The address of E. F. for service is ———, in the parish of ———, in the county of ———.

"Claim on Registration.

"LAND REGISTRY.

"No. ———.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and of the Application of A. B.

"E. F., of ———, hereby claims that the registration of the title to the lands known as ——— [or, in the occupation of ———, or otherwise identified], situate in the parish of ———, in the county of ———, notice of the intention to register which has been given by public advertisement [or served on him, as the case may be], shall be made subject to [here state the nature of claim.]

"The address of E. F. for service is ———, in the county of ———.

"Dated this ——— day of ———.

"[Signature of the claimant or his solicitor.]"

If any objection or claim, with reference to registration, shall be lodged in the office, notice thereof will be given to the applicant or his solicitor.

"The applicant or his solicitor, within such time as shall be appointed for that purpose, shall serve every person making any such objection or claim with a notice in writing, to the effect that the objection or claim will be heard before the registrar at the time therein mentioned, such time not being less than two clear days after service of such notice. The applicant or his solicitor shall obtain an appointment before the registrar for hearing the same at the time mentioned in such notice, and, on such hearing, the person making such objection or claim may appear, and be heard in person or by his solicitor or counsel." (18).

* N.B.—The objection should bear the same number as the number on the advertisement or notice.

† N.B.—The claim should bear the same number as the number on the advertisement or notice.

The following is a form of the notice required:—

"Notice to Objector to or Claimant on Registration.

"LAND REGISTRY.

"No. —.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and of the Application of A. B.

"Take notice, that the objection [or claim] lodged by you to [or on] the registration of the title to the lands known as [or, in the occupation of —, or otherwise identified], situate in the parish of —, in the county of —, is appointed to be heard before the registrar, at the office of Land Registry, on the — day^o of —, at — o'clock, and that you may attend before the registrar at such time and place, by yourself or your solicitor or counsel, and there and then shew cause, by affidavit or otherwise, in support of your objection [or claim.]

"Dated this — day of —.

"[Signature of the applicant or his solicitor.]

"To —, of —."

The notice must be prepared, settled, and served, and the service verified in like manner as the other notices before provided for.

The 13th section provides, "that the registrar may decide on such objection or claim, or may refer the same to the judge of the Court of Chancery." If the registrar decide, either party may appeal to the Court from his decision.

The 24th section of the act enacts, "that it shall be lawful for the registrar and for the judge of the Court of Chancery respectively, to order the costs and expenses properly incurred of any person properly appearing upon any proceeding taken under this act for the purpose of such registration to be paid by the applicant."

Reference to Court.

If any question is referred to the Court, the mode of proceeding is by summons in chambers, as pointed out by the 134th section of the act. The Master of the Rolls is the judge to whom the duties vested in the Court of Chancery in relation to the act have been assigned.

Caveats.

Before registration, the applicant must cause a search to be made in the register against caveats, and in case any caveat has been lodged with the registrar, the course to be pursued is pointed out by the 38th section of the act. The notice referred to in such section must be prepared, settled, and served, and the service verified in like manner as the other notices hereinbefore provided for.

The following is the form of notice:—

"Notice to Person lodging Caveat.

"LAND REGISTRY.

"No. —.

"In the Matter of the Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, and Application of A. B.

"Take notice, that A. B., of —, in the county of —, has applied for registration of the title to the [insert description of land as in caveat], and if you intend to appear and oppose such registration, you are to enter an appearance for that purpose at the office of Land Registry, No. 34, Lincoln's-inn-fields, in the county of Middlesex, before the expiration of ten days from the day on which you are served herewith.

"Dated this — day of —.

"[Signature of the applicant or his solicitor.]

"To —, of —."

* N. B.—Not less than two clear days after service of notice.

Searches.

When the title is ready to be entered on the register, such searches for judgments, &c. must be made as the registrar shall think right. These searches will be made by a person appointed by the registrar for such purpose. The charge of such person for making the searches must be paid by the applicant. The amount will be settled by the registrar if the parties differ.

Oaths before Registration.

The 22nd section of the act provides, that "before the final registration of any land with an indefeasible title, the applicant, and his solicitor or agent, or certificated conveyancer, and such other person or persons as the registrar shall require, shall make oath that all deeds, wills, and writings relating to the title of the lands, or any part thereof, and all facts material to the title thereto, and all charges, liens, incumbrances, contracts, and dealings affecting the same, or any part thereof, or giving any right as against the applicant, have, to the fullest extent of their respective knowledge, information, and belief, been made known to the registrar."

Value for the Purposes of the 127th and 128th Sections of the Act.

"In the case of the registration of land, or of any transfer of land not upon a sale, and in the case of a land certificate, the value of the land shall, if required by the registrar, be stated in an affidavit made by or on behalf of the applicant, and may, if the registrar shall think fit, be ascertained by a computation made by him from the rental of the land, or by such other means as shall be satisfactory to the registrar, or may be settled by agreement between him and the applicant." (36).

The 127th and 128th sections provide for the payment of fees on the first entry of land on the register, and such fees have been fixed according to the following scale; viz.—

Property under 1000 l. in value, for every 100 l. - - - - -	£0	5	0
If under 5000 l. , for the first 1000 l. - - - - -	2	10	0
And for every 100 l. above - - - - -	0	3	0
If under 20,000 l. , for the first 5000 l. - - - - -	8	10	0
And for every 100 l. above - - - - -	0	2	0
If above 20,000 l. , for the first 20,000 l. - - - - -	23	10	0

Fractional parts of 100*l.* are reckoned as 100*l.* Stamps to the amount of the fees must be affixed by the applicant, before registration, to the particulars, under the 7th section above mentioned.

Stamping Deeds on Registration.

"Where any of the muniments of title are in the hands of an incumbrancer, or other person not bound to produce the same, the consent of such person to the production of such muniments, and the stamping thereof, as required by the 91st section of the act, must be procured." (6).

The 91st section provides, that, before registration, the deeds and evidences of title produced to the registrar shall be stamped so as to give notice of the registration. Under this last section all the muniments of title belonging to the applicant, including those in the hands of incumbrancers deriving title through him, must previously to registration be produced at the office, and stamped accordingly.

AS TO LEASEHOLD ESTATES.

"Notice of every application to register a leasehold estate shall, where practicable, be given to the lessor or grantor, or his representative, and such notice shall be in such form, and shall be served in all respects as the registrar shall direct." (19).

The mode of proceeding for the registration of the title to leasehold estates will be the same as that before pointed out as to registration of indefeasible titles. As, however, no indefeasible title will extend to the title of the lessor or grantor, it will not be necessary to deduce such last-mentioned title. The notice to be given to the lessor or grantor, or his representatives, should be prepared, settled, and served, and the service verified in like manner as the other notices before provided for.

The 26th section of the act defines a leasehold estate, of which registration may be made, as "lands demised for terms of years, of which fifty years are still to come and unexpired, or demised for lives or for years determinable with lives, and in which two lives at least are still subsisting," and enacts, that "application may be made by persons having such estates and interests in the leasehold estates as are similar or corresponding to the estates and interests of the persons entitled to apply for the registry of freehold land."

AS TO TITLES NOT INDEFEASIBLE.

The form of the application for registration without an indefeasible title will be the same as that of the application for registration with an indefeasible title, mutatis mutandis. The evidence required by the 25th section of the act, and any other evidence by means of which the applicant purposes to satisfy the registrar of his title to be registered, should be lodged in the office. The before-mentioned provisions for ascertaining and identifying the lands will be applicable. No advertisements, however, of the intention to register will be necessary. It may be observed, with respect to applications for registration without an indefeasible title, that the registrar, in defining the period at which an indefeasible title shall arise, must be guided by the length of time during which the applicant shall shew that he has, or those through whom he claims have, been in possession as owner or owners in fee-simple.

The 25th section of the act is as follows:—

"Application for registration without an indefeasible title may be made by any person, subject to the following conditions:—

1. The applicant shall prove to the satisfaction of the registrar that he, or some person under whom he claims, has been in the actual enjoyment or receipt of the rents and profits of the land as owner of the fee-simple thereof, continuously and without interruption, for a period of ten years immediately preceding the time of such application:

2. The last deed or will (if any) under which the applicant derives title shall be produced to the registrar:

If the applicant claims as heir-at-law, evidence shall be given that the ancestor was in the enjoyment of the estate as owner thereof at the time of his decease:

3. The rules above enacted as to the description of the land to be registered shall apply, and the registrar shall adopt the same course, and take the same proceedings, for the purpose of ascertaining the accuracy of the description of the lands and of the boundaries thereof, as are hereinbefore directed with respect to registration with an indefeasible title:

4. A statutory declaration shall be made by the applicant and his solicitor or agent, or certificated conveyancer, and, if necessary, any other person whose evidence may be deemed necessary by the registrar, that they respectively believe the applicant to be, either alone or jointly with other persons to be named and described (and subject to any qualification, condition, or exception, which shall be stated), well entitled to the fee-simple of the lands proposed to be registered:

5. If the land be registered, the registrar shall, in the record of title, define the time, event, or circumstances from and after which an indefeasible title shall attach: when the time has arrived, the event happened, or the defined circumstances exist, a judge of the Court of Chancery may, upon proof thereof, and if there be no other objection, after such and the like notices as are hereinbefore required in case of an application for registration of a title as indefeasible shall have been duly given, direct a transfer of the land to the register of estates with an indefeasible title, and thereupon the registrar shall make up a proper record of the title to such land, and the applicant and other persons named in such record of title shall have the same estates, rights, and privileges as if the land had been registered with an indefeasible title:
6. Subject to the enactments herein contained, the registration of any person as owner of land without an indefeasible title shall not prejudice any estate, right, or interest created or existing at or before the date of such registration."

LAND CERTIFICATE.

Every registered owner is entitled to a land certificate, being a copy from the register of all the entries thereon relating to his estate. A deposit of this certificate as a lien has the same effect as a deposit of title deeds has in the case of an unregistered title.

The fees on land certificates are payable on the following scale, viz.:—

Property under 1000 l. in value	-	-	£0	7	0
If above 1000 l. and under 5000 l.	-	-	0	15	0
If above 5000 l. and under 10,000 l.	-	-	1	0	0
If above 10,000 l. and under 20,000 l.	-	-	2	0	0
If above 20,000 l. and under 40,000 l.	-	-	3	0	0
If above 40,000 l.	-	-	5	0	0

RULES OF SUCCESSION AND INHERITANCE.

WE gave a few weeks ago (ante, p. 333) explanations prefixed to the Report of the Commissioners appointed to prepare a Body of Substantive Law for India. We now give a specimen of the first portion of the code as prepared by them.

1. Unless the contrary appears from the context, words importing the singular number include the plural number, and words importing the plural number include the singular number, and words importing the male sex include the female sex.

2. The word "person" includes any company or association, or body of persons, whether incorporated or not.

3. Whenever the word "year" or the word "month" is used, it is to be understood that the year or the month is to be reckoned according to the British calendar.

4. The words "zillah judge," include judges of cities and other officers possessing the powers of a zillah judge.

5. No person shall, by marriage, acquire any interest in the property of the person whom he or she marries, nor become incapable of doing any act in respect of his or her own property, which he or she could have done if unmarried.

6. The age of majority shall, in all cases, be eighteen years complete.

7. Succession to the immoveable property of a person deceased is regulated by the law of India, wherever he may have had his domicile at the time of his death.

Succession to the moveable property of a person deceased is regulated by the law of the country in which he had his domicile at the time of his death.

Illustrations.

(a). A., having his domicile in India, dies in France, leaving moveable property in France, moveable property in England, and property, both moveable and immoveable, in India; the succession to the whole is regulated by the law of India.

(b). A., an Englishman, having his domicile in France, dies in India, and leaves property, both moveable and immoveable, in India. The succession to the moveable property is regulated by the rules which govern, in France, the succession to the moveable property of an Englishman dying domiciled in France, and the succession to the immoveable property is regulated by the law of India.

8. A person can only have one domicile for the purpose of succession to his moveable property.

9. The domicile of origin of every person of legitimate birth, is in the country in which, at the time of his birth, his father was domiciled; or, if he is a posthumous child, in the country in which his father was domiciled at the time of the father's death.

Illustration.

At the time of the birth of A. his father was domiciled in England, A.'s domicile of origin is in England, whatever may be the country in which he was born.

10. The domicile of origin of an illegitimate child is in the country in which, at the time of his birth, his mother was domiciled.

11. The domicile of origin prevails until a new domicile has been acquired.

12. A man acquires a new domicile by taking up his fixed habitation in a country which is not that of his domicile of origin.

Explanation.—A man is not to be considered as having taken up his fixed habitation in India merely by reason of his residing there in her Majesty's civil or military service, or in the exercise of any profession or calling.

Illustrations.

(a). A., whose domicile of origin is in England, proceeds to India, where he settles as a barrister or a merchant, intending to reside there during the remainder of his life; his domicile is now in India.

(b). A., whose domicile is in England, goes to Austria, and enters the Austrian service, intending to remain in that service; A. has acquired a domicile in Austria.

(c). A., whose domicile of origin is in France, comes to reside in India, under an engagement with the Indian Government for a certain number of years; it is his intention to return to France at the end of that period, he does not acquire a domicile in India.

(d). A., whose domicile is in England, goes to reside in India for the purpose of winding up the affairs of a partnership which has been dissolved, and with the intention of returning to England as soon as that purpose is accomplished; he does not by such residence acquire a domicile in India, however long the residence may last.

(e). A., having gone to reside in India, under the circumstances mentioned in the last preceding illustration, afterwards alters his intention, and takes up his fixed habitation in India; A. has acquired a domicile in India.

(f). A., whose domicile is in the French settlement of Chandernagore, is compelled, by political events, to take refuge in Calcutta, and resides in Calcutta for many years, in the hope of such political changes as may enable him to return with safety to the Chandernagore; he does not, by such residence, acquire a domicile in British India.

(g). A., having come to Calcutta under the circumstances stated in the last preceding illustration, continues to reside there after such political changes have occurred as would enable him to return with safety to Chandernagore, and he intends that his residence in Calcutta shall be permanent; A. has acquired a domicile in British India.

13. Any person may acquire a domicile in India by making and depositing in some office in India (to be fixed by the Governor-General in Council, or the Governor in Council, as the case may be), a declaration in writing under his hand of his desire to acquire such domicile, provided that he shall have been resident in India for one year immediately preceding the time of his making such declaration.

14. A person who is appointed by the government of one country to be its ambassador, consul, or other representative in another country, does not acquire a domicile in the latter country by reason only of residing there in pursuance of his appointment; nor does any other person acquire such domicile by reason only of residing with him as a servant, or as part of his family.

15. A new domicile continues until the former domicile has been resumed, or another has been acquired.

16. The domicile of a minor follows the domicile of the parent from whom he derived his domicile of origin.

Exception.—The domicile of a minor does not change with that of his parent, if the minor is married, or holds any office or employment in the service of her Majesty, or has set up, with the consent of the parent, in any distinct business.

17. By marriage a woman acquires the domicile of her husband, if she had not the same domicile before.

18. The wife's domicile during the marriage follows the domicile of her husband.

Exception.—The wife's domicile no longer follows that of her husband if they be separated by the sentence of a competent Court, or if the husband is undergoing a sentence of transportation.

19. Except in cases above provided for, a person cannot during minority acquire a new domicile.

20. An insane person cannot acquire a new domicile in any other way than by his domicile following the domicile of another person.

21. If a man dies, leaving moveable property in India, in the absence of proof of any domicile elsewhere, succession to the property is regulated by the law of India.

22. Kindred or consanguinity is the connexion or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor.

23. Lineal consanguinity is that which subsists between two persons, one of whom is descended in a direct line from the other, as between a man and his father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line; or between a man, his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. Every generation constitutes a degree, either ascending or descending. A man's father is related to him in the first degree, and so likewise is his son; his grandfather and grandson in the second degree; his great-grandfather and great-grandson in the third.

24. Collateral consanguinity is that which subsists between two persons who are descended from the same stock or ancestor, but neither of whom is descended in a direct line from the other. For the purpose of ascertaining in what degree of kindred any collateral relative stands to a person deceased, it is proper to reckon upwards from the person deceased, to the common stock, and then downwards to the collateral relative, allowing a degree for each person, both ascending and descending.

25. For the purpose of succession, there is no distinction between those who are related to a person deceased through his father, and those who are related to him through his mother; nor between those who are related to him by the full blood, and those who are related to him by the half blood; nor between those who were actually born in his lifetime, and those who, at the date of his death, were only conceived in the womb, but who have been subsequently born alive.

PHILLIPS'S LAW OF COPYRIGHT.

In 8vo., price 12s. cloth,

THE LAW of COPYRIGHT in WORKS of LITERATURE and ART, and in the Application of Designs. With the Statutes relating thereto. By CHARLES PALMER PHILLIPS, of Lincoln's-inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. In 8vo. 1863.

"Mr. Phillips has shewn, not only great diligence in collecting cases bearing upon the various topics which he has treated, but considerable judgment in the manner in which he has dealt with them. He has spared no pains to make his work reliable as a legal text-book, and at the same time equally useful to publishers, authors, artists, and other persons who are interested in works of literature, art, or design. In a word, such a book has long been wanted, and Mr. Phillips has given abundant proof of his ability to meet the desideratum."—Solicitors' Journal, Nov. 14, 1863.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 1, 1864.

WE may apply to the amount of legal reform which the law officers of the Crown have introduced in the session which has lately expired, Lord Westbury's own quotation in his judgment in The Alexandra case :—

"Quid dignum tanto feret hic promissor hiatus, Parturiunt montes nascetur ridiculus mus."

Possibly the weakness of the ministry, and the overwhelming interest of the Danish question have rendered this puny result inevitable; but the first of these causes was in existence, and was well known to exist, when the ministerial programme was announced; and the second seems hardly to be a sufficient excuse for so melancholy a shortcoming. The introduction of measures of law reform, merely to withdraw them on the ground that there is no hope of passing them, is trifling with the subject, and leads men to think that these measures have been hastily taken up, and that as soon as they are exposed to daylight they are found to be full of fatal defects. The lamentable deficiencies in the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, ought to have prevented carelessness and want of due consideration in subsequent measures.

That it has not had this effect, we think, the "Act for Limitation of Actions and Process for Small Debts, and to amend the Acts relating to County Courts, and to confer on such Courts a limited Jurisdiction in Equity," is a decisive proof. Our readers will remember that it was proposed by the act to limit the period within which "any debt or money demand, not exceeding 20*l.*," could be recovered, to one year after the debt or demand, "or some part thereof," became due and payable. Now, a very little consideration would have convinced the framers of this act that it was a manifest injustice to confine the creditor to so short a space of time. The idea was scouted as soon as it was broached, and Lord Westbury immediately gave way to the more reasonable proposition of the other law Lords, extending the period of one year to three years. Then, again, no one could understand the meaning of the words "or some part thereof." In a previous article (ante, p. 199) we shewed the absurdity to which the introduction of these words might lead, and which, upon the smallest reflection, must have been palpable even to the framers of the act. This is only one specimen of the want of care and due consideration which characterise a measure containing much that was wise and salutary, and which would naturally have the effect of creating a prejudice against the entire bill. There was one clause in it which almost redeemed all its defects—the clause which in certain actions of tort enabled a judge either to compel the plaintiff to give security for costs, or to send the cause to the county court—an enactment which, if well worked, would have had the effect of stopping many actions which are brought for the mere sake of costs. We cannot help thinking, that if the framers of the bill had considered more carefully the nature of the provisions which it contained, and the probability or improbability of their being accepted by the Legislature, they might have introduced a measure which would have passed through Parliament, and been a wholesome addition to the statute-book. It is to be hoped that the bill will be reintroduced next session, and that advantage will be taken of the suggestions for its improvement, which were made in the last. The Attorney-General stated in the House of Commons, on the 13th July, that such was the Chancellor's intention.

Another measure which has been discussed for several sessions, but which seems fated never to pass, is that for consolidating the law courts. The Attorney-General stated on the 23rd May, that it was not abandoned for the session, although he could not fix a day for bringing it on; but it was not brought on, and we suppose it will not be till a Chief Justice has been suffocated by the foul atmosphere of one of the present courts—most probably the Bail Court. Justice Mellor spoke out manfully last term against the dreadful inconvenience to which judges, jurors, and all persons who attended the courts, were exposed in the present state of the courts; and the same learned judge declined to expose himself or his fellow creatures to a premature death by sitting throughout the day in the Second Court of Queen's Bench at Guildhall. Mr. Montague Smith has also done good service by bringing the matter before the House of Commons, and calling their attention to the "buildings and sheds used for the superior courts of law and equity." The Attorney-General, in answer to him, hinted at certain interests which stood in the way of the measure, regretted the delay, and hoped soon to lay a bill on the table; a hope which, we trust, will not be satisfied simply by bringing forward a measure, and then withdrawing it. We cannot understand what difficulties can have stood in the way of a measure which everybody admits to be required, and which all professional men are longing for. Lord Lyndhurst is said to have defined a difficulty as "a thing to be overcome;" but those to whose hands reforms of the law are now intrusted seem to think a difficulty a sufficient reason for withdrawing a bill.

So much has been said by Lord Westbury about law reform, and so little has been done by him, that he must see his character is at stake; and we may, therefore, hope that the next session will witness some real earnestness in carrying out the measures which are introduced, and especially the two to which we have referred. Whoever may be Lord Chancellor, we trust he will take up these bills, and resolutely persist in passing them.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

Speech of Sir J. P. WILDE, 23rd September, 1864.

Sir J. P. WILDE said—The 7th February, 1828, was a memorable day in the annals of law reform. Then it was that the greatest orator of his age delivered his celebrated oration in the House of Commons, and laid open the sweeping changes which our law required. From that moment an impulse was given which has not ceased to be felt. Interest was aroused, indignation excited for the errors of the past, and a basis laid on which to build fair hopes of the future. Since that time the progress of law reform has been unceasing, though gradual; and now, after thirty-six years, after the destruction of a host of anomalies, and the removal of barriers and obstructions, such as set justice at defiance, we find ourselves still engaged in the same work, and, singularly enough, under the guidance of the same hand. No one can rise from the perusal of that remarkable speech, and a contrast with the reforms actually since effected, without marvelling at the success with which the defects and weak points of our judicial system were hit upon and exposed; and it is not too much to say, that nine-tenths of the precise evils there indicated have been successfully met by the precise remedies there proposed. A glance at the subjects dealt with will serve to shew us both the benefits that we have reaped, and the evils from which we have escaped. It will further serve to stimulate us to successful labour in the same field. Having glanced rapidly at the principal changes recently effected, Sir James proceeded:—I wish to draw attention to the fact, that the whole of these changes have been confined to the procedure of the courts, and the method of applying the law, not to the body of the law itself. It is the double function of procedure to precede and follow legal adjudication, first ascertaining the facts in dispute, and then carrying into execution the decrees of the law upon them. It is, therefore, properly the machinery of the law. Now, in 1828 the avenues to justice were so choked with artificial obstacles, that approach was practically denied. Expense, delay, uncertainty—these three monster evils barred the access of the suitor, or terrified him into submission. The clearing of these obstacles, while it has opened the way to the speedy and certain administration of the law for the suitor, has brought the law reformer face to face with the body of the law itself. The question, then, forces itself upon us—is the law itself free from defects of a similar character to those which have disfigured its procedure? Can we boast of a judicature so logical, so free from entanglement and inconsistency, so clear and uniform, so harmonious and well-balanced, as to be worthy of our social progress, and equal to the mixed and multiplied wants of our age? Law means justice administered according to method; and in this justice should be paramount, and method subordinate. Good laws will work occasional hardships, for they should be unbending; but if well administered, never injustice, for their principle should be unerring. Every legal system must impose some forms upon the business transactions of life, but they should be as few as possible, lest from guides and supports they pass into fetters and trammels. The law should also be clear; because simple in its principle, though diffuse in details, and compact in form, because well collated, though compendious in grasp. How far can we conscientiously say that the common law of this country fulfils these ends? To what extent can it lay claim to simplicity, certainty, clearness, and unerring justice? Above all, what can we say of its compactness, whose principles wander at large through the pages of 300 volumes, and the leaves of whose oracles lie as they first fell, scattered and unsown? When we reflect on the history and growth of our laws, we have no need to be surprised or ashamed. The marvel is, that they contain so much worthy of admiration and homage. If they do not meet all our modern wants, to how many of them have they been gradually and insensibly adapted? Is it to be wondered at, if laws which sufficed in the time of the Plantagenets fall short in the present age? Bear in mind, that the laws of this country have suffered no general revision from time immemorial. As the middle classes forced their way, as the wealth of land found itself emulated, if not surpassed, by the wealth of trade, as civilisation bore its universal fruit of complicated relations in life, the laws regulating these relations ought to have felt an equal progress. Provision should have been made by the Legislature for new requirements, and the obsolete constantly thrust out. But was this ever done? Did the change of our social condition at any period of our history carry with it a new system of laws framed by the Legislature for the new matter with which it had to deal? Was a fresh chapter from time to time added to our code to keep pace with the fresh chapters of history? Far from it. With the exception of the Statute of Frauds, the Statute of Limitations, and a few acts directed to very limited objects, the Legislature has laid no hand on the body of the common law. What wonder, then, that after the lapse of centuries legal procedure should have been found incompetent to the swift movements and varied terms of a community whose time had become wealth. And, in like manner, who would reasonably expect that laws which, originally highly artificial, were adapted to the time when nearly all property consisted in land should be unfit to pursue the complications of personal property and the intricate folds of trade? The gradual development which has turned a handful of military adventurers and a population of serfs into the wealthiest commercial community of the world, has surely called for the destruction of as much that was old and useless as the creation of what was new and requisite. What have been the means employed to this end? With rare exceptions, nothing but the judicial power. It has been left to the tribunals themselves so to mould old principles into new forms as to make them subserve modern uses. The law lying in no fixed code, but only in tradition and the records of its own application, was capable enough of being bent to new purposes and fashioned to new ends; and administered by powerful minds with great labour, and by a body of men drawn from no particular or favoured class, a structure has been raised, chiefly within the last century and a half, of which we may well be proud. But this fabric, like the political constitution of this country, has been a thing of very gradual growth. If any one doubts this, let him ask himself with what success he would be likely to search the Year Books or the pages of the old reporters for any authority in support of nine out of ten of the decisions to which a single term now gives birth. Let him ask himself with what probability of success he would search in the history of remote centuries for the incidents and combinations which now ask daily for judicial solution. Land, it is true, still exists, but how occupied and enjoyed? under what relations and conditions? to what ends and purposes, as contrasted with feudal days? Such reflections as these serve to shew how great a change must have passed over our judicature. A few further reflections may tend to shew with what inevitable defects. In saying this, I am far from the suggestion or belief that this gradual progress of the law, built up on old foundations, resting step by step on precedents reaching far back into remote antiquity, and thus bringing up to the surface the experience and wisdom of past generations, was altogether faulty in system, or void of invaluable features. It had, however, this capital defect, that the powers of the courts of law were constructive only; under the name of adaptation they could practically create; under no name could they destroy. But it was not enough to create, power was needed to abolish; it was not enough to build, unless timely clearance could be made of the ruins and rubbish of past structures. Here it is, that, in my opinion, the system has broken down. This defect it was that choked the accessions of justice with empty forms and worn out expedients, and induced those vices of procedure which the labours of the law reformers of the last thirty years have scarce sufficed to remove. And this it is which still affects the body of our laws themselves, binding our real property in the clogs and shackles of feudal rights, and tainting the laws of personalty with analogies largely drawn from the same extinct system. Yes; the life, the body, and even the spirit of the feudal system has passed away, but the armoury of its weapons and defences is still cherished in our halls of justice. Let us examine our English system of law-making a little closer and observe the inevitable process. Did a new position arise for which the jurist had no precedent, analogy was resorted to. If no near analogy was at hand, a more distant one was sought; if none found in the region of similar rights, a more remote one, taken from a different class or branch, was often brought forward and bent, perhaps distorted, till it served the end. It might, perhaps, have been better to deal with a new class of cases as avowedly demanding an application of law, for which there was no precedent; and this has been sometimes, though more rarely, done. But it must be borne in mind that the Courts at Westminster had, in strictness, no power to make the law, but only to declare it. They had no alternative, therefore, between declaring the voice of the law to be absolutely silent, and adapting its recorded oracles, such as they were, to the case in hand as best they might. And thus the law has grown, professedly, indeed, drawing its decisions from its own inexhaustible stores, but in reality framing, adapting, creating as it went along. From this method both evils and benefits have flowed of a sufficiently remarkable character. It is no small benefit that, in a fresh application of legal principles to a new class of cases, there should be apparently mingled the element and the sanction of time. The decisions of the Courts being avowedly nothing more than enunciations of the pre-existing law, though in reality new determinations framed upon old principles, carry with them the veneration of tradition, while they embody the spirit of the time. It is another circumstance of value that the changes effected are gradual, and while they do not anticipate, yet keep pace with, the necessities of the day. Further: when any new subject engages the attention of the Courts, it is the peculiar feature of this system, that each step is taken separately, never exceeding the particular circumstances of the case, or aiming at generalities. Thus the law falls into shape as the subject becomes familiar; opportunity is given by the succession of each fresh example for contrast and reconsideration; the direction first taken is followed out, modified, or even reversed; limitations and qualifications make their appearance, and something like a general rule at length emerges, well suited to the actual exigencies from the experience of which it is drawn. If this is legislation, it is legislation of the best kind, for it is framed by those who have no popular interests to support, or collateral ends to attain, and who bring to the task carefully trained intellects, familiar with the subject in hand. The evils of the system are, perhaps, equally apparent. Invested with a power larger than avowed, the tribunals may be said to have too much or too little confided to them. If they frame new applications of the law, they are obliged to do so on old models only, and administer them under old forms. Tied down by the past, they are too little set at large to work out entire justice. Working in the trammels of tradition, they are driven to the resort of legal fictions. Founding all decision on precedent, they are circumscribed and limited by the analogies on which their decisions are founded. The broad rule of right is but too apt to suffer in such circumstances, and full justice must needs be at times shorn down to obtain a footing on precedent. But the worst feature attending a law purely traditional is its incapacity to obliterate. Tradition is the expression of permanence; and if it perpetuates truth, it also embalms error. It renders what is really obsolete unquestioned, because it is familiar, and fences it from attack by giving it the immunity of age. Thus it is that many of the positions of our law pass without inquiry, though their justice might well be challenged. Now, let us compare this system of law-making with the more comprehensive system of a code adopted in most other countries. The attractions of the code are obvious, and its faults not so apparent. The object of both is alike to form a permanent frame for the action of justice. The chief point of contrast lies here—the framers of a code propound their principles in accord with justice, and, casting about in their minds to imagine the possible cases falling within them, adjust them accordingly, giving them expression in elaborated rules. The English system frames no rule in advance; looks backwards in place of forward, and substitutes the actual experiences of the past for the possibilities of the future. True, the future is not provided for in the latter, except so far as principles are gradually evolved, which make solution not difficult or unexpected when the case arises; whereas the former professes to make such provision. But is this provision ever made with success? Does any code really offer a text which, when applied to the circumstances of an individual case, at once, and without reasonable doubt, decides it? Let the innumerable decisions on some of the most celebrated codes answer the question. Take the Ordonnance de la Marine of Louis XIV. How simple and brief, and apparently plain, the text! Yet who ever read the ingenious commentaries of Valin or Boulay-Paty on any and every article of it without owning that the text was only plain because the difficulties of particular cases were not present to view, and only simple because their complications were excluded? The same thing is true of the codes of the French empire, and of all others which the world ever saw. The truth is, that the intricacies and complexity of possible combinations of fact are beyond the range of human conception, and any attempt to foresee and provide for them all beforehand, and dispense a ready-made justice with success, will give little reward to the labour it wastes. But a code resting on no detailed decisions or elaborated instances to expound it, has an especial evil of its own. There is no more fruitful source of doubt and litigation than the meaning of language. The careless use of language does much, but the inadequacy of language as the vehicle of precise thought does perhaps even more. What treaty, or code, or statute, was ever so framed that its meaning, in all possible contingencies, was free from reasonable controversy? Now, the especial evil of all codes and statutes is, that, over and above the difficulty of framing adequate principles, the ambiguities of construction are introduced. Expressed in certain definite language, its force depends upon the interpretation which ingenuity may give or deny it. And here the system of case law contrasts favourably, for its principles, enforced in every variety of language and under every turn of thought, shine out in their application rather than in their expression, and are further removed from the cavil of words. The most ardent lover of uniformity and symmetry would hardly be prepared, then, to surrender the treasures of our common law for the inevitable litigation of a code; but does it follow that nothing can be done to render our system more uniform, and our jurisprudence more compact and harmonious? We have nothing in the English law between the succinctness of a maxim and the detail of an individual case. We have no declared body of rules, however general, and no set of collected principles, however broad. There are, no doubt, to be found, scattered up and down our reports, enunciations of general legal principles; but even they have never been collated or brought together, and their mutual dependence shewn by group or contrast. But in far the majority of cases decided no general principle is propounded. The principle is, indeed, there, guiding and controlling the decision; a silent appeal is made to it in the mind of the tribunal, but such is the jealous caution of the judicial mind, and so great the obstacles cast in the way of generalities by a system which calls only for the decision of the individual case, that broad rules are seldom or never laid down. Hence it comes that the cases containing the law on one particular branch or subject, are rarely appealed to in discussion of another branch or subject, though these may be cognate, and though the law ought to be, and probably is, in harmony with respect to them. No subject can be treated philosophically that is treated entirely in detail; and no system can promise harmony that is based on separate trains of independent thought. Is it not possible to amend our legal system in this regard? If it be considered not wise that the tribunal should do more than decide the individual case, and pledge itself, as it were, to an area of law wider than that occupied by the matter in hand—and this to preclude the possibility of prejudging difficulties not foreseen—still the law, as already settled, and to the extent to which it has already been actually applied, might surely be bound together and epitomised for the practical use of mankind. Is not this what, in fact and in practice, every well-read lawyer more or less does for himself? When a case presents itself to his mind for legal solution, does he instantly recur to some specific case forming a precedent, or does he not rather fall back upon the general legal principles with which his mind is imbued? Now, I hope I am not too sanguine in this; but I cannot resist the belief, that, within the bounds of reasonable labour and time, the general principles and broad bases on which our common law reposes, and which tacitly guide the decisions of our Courts, might be brought to the surface, grouped together, subordinated in their several relations, and contrasted in their differences. An attempt of the kind, and not without great success, was made by the late Mr. Smith, in his Leading Cases. And those who have studied the notes of that book will not fail to perceive how easily and with what success large groups of cases treated and handled together have been made to yield up short and succinct propositions of law. What I desire to see is a similar attempt made with authority, and on a much larger scale, to be finally confirmed by act of Parliament; but I do not conceal from myself that the first judicial minds of the country are alone adequate to the task; at least, in its ultimate stages, and that it is far beyond the reach of the unpaid services of occupied men. If such a result could be obtained, the benefits are not doubtful; to the student and the general public the vast area covered by the law would present a district set out in order, in place of a tangled thicket. The true bearing of each abstract proposition would stand out plainly, because side by side with others of a similar nature. Here, too, another great advantage would be reaped. As the decisions which have radiated from some central case came to be classed together, and their common principles with its qualifications and limitations extracted, all those of a questionable soundness would come to be suppressed. That our books abound with such cannot be denied; and their expurgation by authority is an end of great importance. For, once entangled in them, the Courts are either led astray or only escape to the doing of justice by some refined distinction, which, in its turn, becomes a snare for the future. It is thus that error once committed under our present system is perpetuated. And decisions whose soundness is doubted for years continue for years to be the rule of judgment and the source of endless distinctions and refinements, until at last they are either trampled out by the reiterated dicta of the tribunals, or reversed in regular form by the courts of appeal. Many, too, are the instances of discordant decisions on identically the same subject, and it is not an uncommon remark, "That all the cases upon this subject cannot be reconciled." Any classification by authority must decide between them, and thus remove, pro tanto, one of the worst evils of the law—uncertainty. But the great gain that would accrue to the law would be the reduction of its bulk. We possess in our legal records accumulated instances of exact justice, in individual cases, series after series of social duties and relative rights, set forth in every variety and combination, and pursued into the minutest details, and to all of which, each in their turn, the law has been applied and adjusted with a precision and laborious rectitude such as the legal annals of no other country can, I believe, produce. The national attribute of exact labour on minute objects has stood us in good stead in the beating out of our laws. And they bear the impress throughout of the national characteristics in the spirit of liberty, the spirit of equality, and the hatred of injustice and oppression. But they exist in a scattered, inconvenient, and unmanageable form. Instances in place of precepts, examples in the place of rules, our recorded decisions stand thick together like a fair field of grain—full of wealth and worth, but waiting the hand that shall gather it into sheaves and store it to the use of man. And here I would observe that the method I propose is properly a digest, and not a code; and a digest has this advantage—that it permits of gradual formation. Unlike a code, which is the offspring of large and comprehensive views—and should deal with all subjects as a whole—a digest, with narrower aim, may properly be worked out piecemeal. In past times the Digest of Comyn and the Abridgment of Bacon did much in this direction, though they owned no authority but that of their intrinsic merit. And in modern times the law would be almost unapproachable but for the text-books, some of them executed with admirable talent, with which the labours of the bar have enriched us. If there be those who fear to handle a body of laws which, on the whole, work so well, I would observe to them, that I propose to displace nothing. I would not that the authority of the cases should necessarily be extinguished by the authority of the digest. Unless expressly set aside, and inconsistent with other decisions better approved, I would have all decisions remain of authority, content to await the time when the life shall have passed into their offspring, and they fall away of themselves, and pass into a sure decay. If there be those who think that a system which has survived with success for five or six centuries can have no great inherent vice, I would recall the attention of such to the position in which we now find ourselves. Each year now calls into being a number of decided cases so large as to threaten the extinction of the law as a conscientious study. I do not stop to inquire into causes, but the fact is, that the present century has added more decided cases to the law than are to be found in the records of the five preceding centuries put together. This vast agglomeration breeds not only confusion in those who are to be bound by the law, but inconsistency in those who administer it. No power of assimilation can keep pace with that of such production, and the tribunals, occupied to the full with the business before them, have little time to master the results of cotemporary decisions. This evil is aggravated by a competitive system of reporting, and the record of useless decisions; but the source of it lies deeper, and the time is now come when we may well ask whether the record of our law is always to lie in detailed instances, whether its principles are capable of no exposition, and whether the most laborious and wealthy community in the world will be content to pass on to posterity a shapeless mass of scattered laws as the legacy of its labours and its wealth. But the cause is that of the present generation as well as of posterity. Is the nation well content with things as they are? Are the conclusions of the law any longer accepted without test, and received without inquiry? Time was when the law had its priesthood, its mysteries, and its votaries. The science of the few was ever the mystery of the many; and while want of knowledge in the latter forbade the support of reason, possession of it in the former commanded the homage of reverence. Our people have ever loved justice and order, and revered the law as the guardian of both. Perhaps this reverence has been in past times carried too far. It concealed its errors and even gilded its faults. Did an estate pass to an unexpected hand by a flaw, the victim received his condolence, but the superior wisdom of the law had its worship. If strength has the element of the sublime, the inscrutable has not less so, and it was just because the ways of the law sometimes passed reason that they achieved admiration. A severe exactitude in the application of a system highly technical has ever been the foremost blemish of English jurisprudence. It was not difficult to exalt this severity of precision into the inflexibility of justice, and mistake an iron rule for a golden precept. And such was the tendency of the national mind, hugging itself in the conceit that its laws were not as the laws of other countries, and well content to worship what seemed at least mysteriously wise. But our lot is cast in times of a far other character. Reason and veneration—the two great forces by which instituted rights are upheld—bid fair to change places, and while one has waxed, the other has waned. There is no subject so sacred, not even the sacred subject of all, which escapes inquiry, observation, and the hard scrutiny of distrust. The law is no exception, and the popular sense of justice may not be violated with impunity, though its violation be backed by the sanction of forms or rules, however time-honoured or venerable. The time has surely come when those who really revere our noble laws should have it at heart to place them beyond cavil, and give them that hold on the good sense of the people which they have ever had on their affections, and it should not be difficult. For all reform is now possible, and the mere respect for what exists presents no longer any barrier to improvement. The slow formation of a general opinion, and the vis inertia which holds the present in its place—characteristics both of the national temperament—are the chief impediments to salutary change. Authority denies nothing now to the general desire, and the waters of discontent are no longer pent up till they overflow. But for this very reason the current of amendment flows torpid and slow. The active pressure of resistance, forcing men into concord towards their common aim, is withdrawn, and freedom to think and act with independence brings with it freedom to differ. It is, therefore, in times such as these that the attainment of a general consent is most difficult. The most proper method to come at this purpose is general discussion. For interchange of ideas and comparison of mind begets both ultimate agreement and moral force to carry it into action. We are here met with this intention; and as the great honour has fallen to my lot of presiding over your deliberations, I have thus made venture on your patience, affecting not to inform, but rather to remind, and for the greater part to confirm rather than convince. But it is from those like yourselves, who have the knowledge to conceive and the public spirit to elaborate, that the impulse of reform must come. The spring and root of all our law reforms have been laid in public opinion. They have been moulded into shape, and carried into result, by the unpaid services of lawyers. It is good to reflect on this, for the power and the machinery are still ours; and it is no bad omen for future amendment that men have been found skilled in the mysteries of the law, and nurtured in its most cherished anomalies, ready to turn that skill to their amendment or removal. I venture not on any enumeration of the numerous shortcomings and defects of our legal system, beyond that to which I have shortly drawn attention. They will be amply discussed, I trust, by others. But I may add a word on the spirit in which legal changes should be approached. The great evil which has ever beset our judicature is that which legal education engenders—the prizing above their worth of refinement and precision. This it was that in legal procedure sacrificed the substantial rights of thousands at the altar of mere words. It culminated in the new rules of pleading of 1834, and begot its own downfall in the triumph of its complete adoption. But it still lives in all branches of our law. The fear of going too far ever present; the fear of not reaching justice faintly felt; positive injustice worked in the present to avoid possible injustice in the future; rights so bound in safeguards, lest they become wrongs, that they cease to be worth asserting; a structure in which form ever overlays substance, and a contest in which justice is apt to sink under the weight of her own armour; while precedent, casting its shadow both ways, binds the present by the errors of the past, and narrows it by the possibilities of the future—such are the fruits which a spirit of over-jealous caution and exactitude is calculated to bear. Nor is it the spirit of the lawyer alone. It is not long since a great peer was accused of shooting at a fellow-subject in a duel, and acquitted because it was not made to appear beyond doubt that his Christian name was Harvey Garnett Phipps, as charged, and not Harvey only, to which the proof extended. Nor have many years passed since a great demagogue conspired, if he did not levy war, against the Queen, and went unpunished after conviction, because the highest tribunal in the land decided in accordance with the law, that the proceedings were faulty in form. And yet our own generation looked on without outcry, and accepted these results without indignation. To all those who would earnestly lay their hand to the task of law reform, I would counsel the necessary boldness to grapple with this evil. I speak not of that boldness which is assumed to challenge the admiration of the multitude, and play the part of superior wisdom in the eyes of the ignorant by sweeping denunciations of that to which others bow; nor of that audacity which is the spurious offspring of veneration, chafing under the reverence of others, and casting off its own in a spirit of defiance; nor of that begotten of idleness and shallowness, which feels the wrongs of a system whose true defects it takes not the pains to discover, and flies out into a general condemnation. But I mean that boldness which is born of the firm conviction, that whatever is contrary to common sense and natural justice ought also to be contrary to law; the boldness which fears not to depart from the past to render homage to the present; which acknowledges that the law is made for man, and not man for the law; and which marches straight to its object, preferring simplicity with some defects to the perfection at which complexity aims, but rarely reaches.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to new Insurers EIGHTY PER CENT. OF THE PROFITS, at Quinquennial Divisions, or a low Rate of Premium without participation of Profits.

Since the establishment of the Company in 1821, the amount of Profits allotted to the Assured has exceeded in Cash value 550,000l., which represents equivalent Reversionary Bonuses of 1,058,000l.

After the Division of Profits at Christmas, 1859, the Life Assurances in force, with existing Bonuses thereon, amounted to upwards of 4,750,000l., the Income from the Life Branch 207,000l. per annum, and the Life Assurance Fund, independent of the Capital, exceeded 1,618,000l.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.—Insurances are effected upon every description of property at home and abroad at moderate rates.

No expense is incurred in effecting a new Insurance beyond the payment of the Annual Premium and Duty, when the Premium amounts to 5s.

Claims liberally and promptly settled.

Notice is hereby given, that FIRE POLICIES which expire at Michaelmas must be renewed within fifteen days at this office; or with Mr. SAMS, No. 1, St. James's-street, corner of Pall-mall; or with the Company's Agents throughout the Kingdom, otherwise they become void.

Applications for Prospectuses and Agencies to be made to the Secretary.

NINE-TENTHS of the Total Profits are divided among the Assured. Considerably more than one-tenth of the Profits is derived from Policies which do not participate in the Profits, so that THE ASSURED HAVE LARGER BONUSES THAN IF THEY FORMED A MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY, and received the whole of the Profits derived from their own Policies.

The last BONUS averaged about SIXTY PER CENT. on the Premiums paid and TWO PER CENT. PER ANNUM on the Sums assured.

The EXPENSES of Management are less than FIVE PER CENT. on the Income.

The PREMIUMS are calculated for every half-year of age.

The Policies of this Society, in the hands of third parties, are NOT vitiated by SUICIDE, or by the Life assured proceeding beyond the limits allowed.

NOTICES OF ASSIGNMENT of Policies registered and acknowledged free of charge. Printed Forms for such Notices furnished when required.

The usual Commission allowed to Solicitors introducing Insurances, the Commission being continued to the person originally entitled to it as long as the Policy remains in force, through whatever channel the Premium may be paid.

LOANS granted on the Society's Policies, on Reversions, Life Interests, and other approved Security.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 8, 1864.

THE judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Coe v. Wise (the defendant being the clerk to the Middle Level Commissioners) still leaves the law as to the liability of public commissioners for the negligence of their agents in a state of uncertainty. In the first place, there was a difference of opinion among the judges; and in the next place, the judgments of the majority appear rather to rest upon the particular language of the statute under which the commissioners acted than upon a general principle of law. It is to be hoped that the Court of Error, before whom the case is about to be brought, will clearly define the law applicable to such cases. The 138th section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 106 (the statute in question), is thus worded:—

"The said drainage commissioners shall make and maintain a good and substantial sluice of brick and stone at or near the entrance of the said cut into the river Ouse, with two or three openings, the waterways of which shall not be less than fifty feet, and with doors to each of the said openings of sufficient height to exclude the tidal waters."

There are also sections in the act enabling the commissioners to sue and be sued, in the name of their clerk, in respect of anything relating to the execution of the act; execution on any judgment obtained against them is to be levied on the goods and chattels belonging to the commissioners by virtue of their office. They may levy rates on the lands within the district, and are to apply the moneys so raised in executing the several works required by the act to be executed, and for the general purposes of carrying the act into execution.

The jury, in answer to questions put to them by Erle, C. J., who tried the cause, found "that the plaintiff had sustained damage by the absence of all due care and skill on the part of the commissioners, in respect of maintaining a certain sluice erected by them; in the next place, by the absence of such due care and skill in not providing remedies against mischief after the sluice was destroyed; and, in the third place, by reason that a certain puddle wall was not made." But they did not find that the commissioners had negligently or improperly employed unskilful or incompetent contractors or agents in the making and maintaining the works, or had any notice that the banks referred to in the 137th section of the act had been constructed without a puddle-clay wall in or near the centre thereof, as required by the section.

Upon this finding, Cockburn, C. J., and Mellor, J., were of opinion, that the defendant was entitled to the verdict, Blackburn, J., being of the contrary opinion. In the arguments and judgments the numerous authorities bearing upon the subject are collected. It would occupy a volume to discuss them all; and after discussing them, the mind would probably be in a state of bewilderment, and unable to extract a principle from them; but there are some leading cases, as it were, on the subject, which it may be useful to mention, and which appear to be the cases on which the Court of Queen's Bench chiefly rested.

The earliest case is Sutton v. Clarke (6 Taunt. 29), where an action was brought against one of the trustees of a turnpike road for damage caused to the plaintiff's land by the insufficiency of a trench made under the advice and superintendence of the surveyor of the trustees. The Court held that the trustees were not liable. "The case," says Gibbs, C. J., "is perfectly unlike that of an individual who, for his own benefit, makes an improvement on his own lands, according to his best skill and diligence, and not foreseeing it will produce any injury to his neighbour. If he thereby unwittingly injures his neighbour, he is answerable. The resemblance fails in the most important point of comparison—that his act is not done for a public purpose, but for private emolument. Here the defendant is not a volunteer; he executes a duty imposed upon him by the Legislature, which he is bound to execute. He exercises his best skill, diligence, and caution in the execution of it, and we are of opinion that he is not liable for an injury which he did not only not foresee, but could not foresee. He has done all that was incumbent on him, having used his best skill and diligence."

Now, if this were the only case on the point, the principle would be clear, namely, that a person exercising a public office, from which he derives no profit, who acts to the best of his skill and judgment in what he orders to be done, and in the appointment of competent persons to carry out his orders, is not responsible for negligence on the part of those persons; and this decision would seem to govern the case of Coe v. Wise, as the jury did not find, and it must be considered not to have been the fact, that the commissioners had been guilty of negligence in the appointment of persons to make and maintain the works. An argument was built on the word "maintain" in the statute, but if it was necessary to appoint officers to take care that the works were well maintained, as well as to take care that they were originally well constructed, we do not think there is much force in the argument.

It is admitted, in the judgment in Sutton v. Clarke, that if the commissioners act wantonly and oppressively, they are responsible to an individual for the injury they do him. We apprehend that in such a case they would be personally responsible, and must satisfy the damages to the plaintiff out of their own funds, whatever right they may have to recoup themselves out of the funds of the undertaking of which they are commissioners; and also if, though unintentionally, they order works to be constructed which are beyond their jurisdiction, that they would be personally responsible, unless there is some special clause in the act under which they are appointed which protects them. The principle laid down in Sutton v. Clarke is clear; but, although the case is not overruled, it is difficult to reconcile it with the decision in the later case of Whitehouse v. Fellows (30 L. J., C. P., 305), unless it is to be considered that in the latter case there was personal negligence on the part of the trustees.

The main ground of the judgment in Sutton v. Clarke is, that the defendant derived no benefit from the works of which he was a commissioner. In a later class of cases, the fact that the body of which the defendants were commissioners or trustees did derive a profit from the works, has been held to be the ground for fixing them with liability. The case of Gibbs v. The Trustees of the Liverpool Docks (4 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 68; 27 L. J., Ex., 321) may be considered the leading case on the point, as it is a judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber. In that case, the trustees of the docks received tolls as trustees; they had only a fiduciary interest in them, but the Court considered that it made no difference whether the tolls were received for a beneficial or fiduciary purpose. It is, however, to be inferred from that case, that there were funds applicable to providing against the events which caused the damage. In fact, as stated by Erle, C. J., in the later case of Holliday v. The Vestry of St. Leonards, Shoreditch (8 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 79; 30 L. J., C. P., 361)—“The trustees received money in the shape of tolls on the vessels coming into the docks, and were bound, therefore, not to allow the vessels to enter when the docks were, to their knowledge, in a dangerous state; they were, consequently, in the situation of persons who, receiving money for an accommodation, are liable for the negligence of their servants in not making such accommodation safe.”

Now, the principles to be deduced from the cases we have cited are tolerably clear. First, that persons acting without profit in a public capacity are not liable for damage caused by the negligence of the agents whom they employ, provided they have taken proper care to select competent agents; unless they are trustees or commissioners acting on behalf of a public body which does receive profit out of the undertaking or works in respect of which the negligence causing damage is committed, then the trustees or commissioners are liable; it being assumed, that the profits so received were applicable to the preventing the negligence. Secondly, that trustees or commissioners, whether or not they have funds so applicable, are liable for damage caused by their personal negligence, or by their acting in a wanton and oppressive manner, and in excess of their powers.

The judgment of the Chief Justice in Coe v. Wise appears to be founded on these principles. He says, “The main criterion in these cases is, whether there is any fund at the disposal of public trustees or commissioners available for the payment of the damages in respect of injury occasioned by negligence. The fact that the Legislature has appropriated the funds in their hands to specific objects, so as to exclude their application to the payment of damages, leads fairly to the inference, that the trustees or commissioners cannot be held liable in their aggregate against corporate character.” And he draws a distinction in another part of his judgment between commissioners for public purposes strictly and the trustees of a public but still a quasi trading body.

Where, therefore, the trustees or commissioners have not been personally negligent, the result seems to be, that they are not liable, unless the body which they represent has funds applicable to paying the damages; and in such cases the damages could not be levied upon the private property of the trustees, but only upon the property of the public body.

Then the case remaining for consideration is that in which the trustees themselves are fixed with personal negligence. Here we apprehend that they are personally liable, and should be sued as individuals, not in their public capacity. If they are to be sued in their public capacity, how are the damages to be levied in cases where the funds of the body which they represent cannot be applied to satisfy the damages, as in Coe v. Wise? Supposing there the jury had found that the commissioners were negligent in their appointment of agents, and, therefore, the verdict had gone against them? If the funds could not be applied towards payment of the damages, the judgment would be fruitless. If, on the other hand, such persons are liable, as any other individuals are, for personal negligence, they would be personally liable on the judgment, whatever indemnities they might be entitled to as between themselves and the public body. Such a rule of law may be alarming to persons so situated, but it seems to be correct.

We may trust that the Court of Error would, in their judgment upon Coe v. Wise, clearly expound the principles which govern liability in such cases. If it does, then their judgment will be of the greatest use in enabling those who have to advise upon such cases to find a safe pathway through the mass of somewhat conflicting and doubtful authorities on the subject.

A Manual for English Bar Students. By THOMAS SPENCE, of Trinity College, Dublin, Barrister-at-Law. [Dun & Duncan, 9, Fleet-street.]

Articled Clerks' Manual. By J. J. S. WHARTON, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. [Stevens, Sons, & Haynes.]

IN some remarks which we recently made on Mr. Josiah W. Smith's Manual of Common Law, we expressed our opinion that manuals are dangerous books for students at their entrance upon their legal studies, inasmuch as the natural tendency of the mind to save itself from labour, would incline a student to content himself with accepting the condensed propositions and rules of law laid down in the manual, instead of tracing them up to the fountain head, and acquainting himself with the authorities on which they are founded. This remark will apply to that portion of Mr. Spence's book which gives an outline of our constitutional history, of common law, equity, and international law; and we may add, further, that the very condensed account which Mr. Spence gives of the rise and progress of each of these heads of law, cannot possibly afford sufficient information upon them, even to the general reader. We think the questions on each of these subjects form the most valuable part of the book. Any one who applies himself sincerely to answering these, must acquire a great amount of information, and must search those books which supply it. Gentlemen who find a difficulty in employing their pupils, and in inducing them to search out the law on any point for themselves, would find Mr. Spence's a useful book.

In his Preface, Mr. Spence broaches a startling proposition, "that an important stimulus would be given to the studies of bar students and to the bar if inferior judgeships were thrown open to competition by examination." If there is to be such an examination, we do not at present see why it is to be limited to candidates for inferior judgeships. In principle politics have nothing to do with the appointments of superior judges, and the fitness of such an appointment is the more necessary, as the duties are the more important. We do not know of any country in which there is such an examination; and it is to be remembered, that although legal knowledge is essential in a judge, there are other essentials which an examination would not test, and the want of which could not be compensated by any amount of legal knowledge.

Mr. Wharton's book has reached its ninth edition; a fact which, in itself, proves it has been acceptable to the Profession, and to students. The remarks we have already made as to manuals will apply to so much of Mr. Wharton's work as bears this character, except that, so far as articulated clerks are concerned, it is not to be expected that they can read profoundly on the subjects of which a manual is a condensation; and, therefore, as a book of reference for them, it is not open to the objections which we have suggested. It contains sets of questions on all the subjects on which articulated clerks are examined, and the student, whether a future barrister or an articulated clerk, can very well ascertain his proficiency in his studies by the way in which he can answer these questions.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

On the fifth day of the Congress at York (Sept. 27), after the general meeting had terminated, the several sections reassembled, and various papers were read. We extract such as come under the class "Jurisprudence:"—

Mr. Robert Stuart's paper, read in this department, on the institution and conduct of public prosecutions, advocated the abandonment of the existing system of prosecution and the appointment of a public prosecutor, as being more in accordance with that which had been long accepted as the true definition of crime, that it was an offence rather against the State than against the individual. The system of the private institution of criminal proceedings had, he believed, nothing to recommend it; and it was costly, uncertain, and, as compared with the system in other countries, unsuccessful. The Scotch system, based on the method of public prosecution, was happily conceived, and most admirably practised. A greater contrast could not be presented to the eye and to the mind than that between an ordinary criminal trial in Scotland and a trial in England. Compared with the method and forms of procedure in the High Court of Justiciary in Scotland, the Old Bailey in London, he had almost said, was neither more nor less than a bear-garden; nor, excepting in the fact of there being a public prosecutor in Scotland, could he account for the difference between the two courts. While he advocated the appointment of a public prosecutor, he would reserve the right of private parties to institute prosecutions at their own expense. He was in favour of retaining the grand jury, and recommended that it should be made a little more efficient by regulations which would go to secure a careful examination of the prosecutor's evidence.

Lord Brougham said he remembered the case of a grand jury in Lancashire, who were violent ultra-Protestants, and who put a man on his trial for murder, who was a Roman Catholic, because his bailiff had allowed a rope to be left across a piece of ground over which a woman fell and lost her life. The judge who presided on that occasion said it was a most scandalous proceeding, and he wished to reprimand the jury, but they had been discharged.

Mr. Stuart maintained that the Scotch system of private recognitions was superior to the English mode, as it enabled the prosecutor to get up his case well, and secured to the accused a fair and impartial trial. The publicity given by newspapers in England to preliminary investigations was often opposed to the true interests of justice, and the press would exercise a sound discretion by withholding the depositions where there was a committal, or likely to be one. He was against the introduction of the verdict of "not proven" allowed in Scotland, thinking it unconstitutional, illegal, and unjust. He concluded by referring to the evils arising from the want of an efficient system of criminal appeal.

Dr. Waddilove read a paper on "The Exclusion of Evidence," in which he maintained the following propositions:—1. That persons charged with a criminal offence should on their trial be permitted to give their evidence on oath in order to clear themselves of the charges against them. 2. That husbands and wives should be competent and compelled to give evidence for and against each other. 3. That parties to a suit, of whatever nature, should be competent and compellable to give evidence against each other in criminal as well as in civil cases. 4. That judges should be empowered to summon any person to give evidence if they thought necessary, whether in civil or criminal cases, and that they might adjourn the case for that purpose.

A long discussion ensued, in the course of which Lord Brougham (who presided) said, that one great difficulty in the way of appointing public prosecutors was the great amount of patronage which it would place in the hands of the Government.

Alderman Leeman opposed the appointment of a public prosecutor; and Mr. Harris, of Manchester, and other gentlemen, supported it.

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS, MIDDLESEX.

On Wednesday, the 5th, Edmond Beales, Esq., the barrister appointed to revise the list of voters for the county of Middlesex, held his court at the Town Hall, Bethnal-green, to revise the lists for that polling district.

Mr. Henry Smith, of Norfolk-street, appeared for the National Conservative Registration Association; Mr. T. Alley Jones, of Clement's-inn, for the Middlesex Conservative Registration Committee; and Mr. W. Albert James, of Parliament-street, for the Liberal Registration Society.

One case alone excited any interest.

Richard Henry Ashford claimed for a share in freehold houses, Cooper's-gardens, Manchester-buildings, Bethnal-green, and, with some others having a similar qualification, was objected to by the Conservatives.

In support of the claim,

Mr. James said, that on several occasions these voters had been objected to, their cases argued, and the votes allowed, particularly in 1845, when the case was heard before the late Mr. Shadwell, and he decided in their favour. On two occasions the names were expunged from the list, once in consequence of the absence of deeds, and on the other occasion the decision was against them on the ground that the legal estate was not in the claimants. In 1861 they were objected to by Mr. J. A. Coates, Mr. Henry Smith, the present objector, representing him. The case was gone into and the votes allowed by the barrister. Since then they had remained on the register. Mr. James then complained that Mr. Smith should have now objected, being, as he was, in possession of the full facts of the case; but he had been given to understand that the objection was taken on the decision in Bennett v. Blaine, but he contended that that decision had no bearing on the present case; it referred to the shareholders in the Liverpool Corn Exchange, who received the proceeds of the letting of certain stalls.

The Barrister.—That case simply confirms the ruling as to the law, and introduces no new principle.

Mr. James.—None whatever. It is simply a confirmation of our text-books on questions of registration, which point out that shareholders having only an interest in net profits are not entitled to be registered. In this case several gentlemen, in 1860, united to form an association or company, termed "The House Property Association;" a deed of settlement was drawn up, in which the objects of the company were fully set forth, and directions given as to the management of its affairs. This deed of settlement he would put in as evidence, and it would be found that none of the trusts therein were incompatible with the holding of a freehold estate by the shareholders. Among other trusts the trustees were to acquire freehold, copyhold, and leasehold property, and other hereditaments purchased with the accumulated funds of the several members of the association, who paid 2s. 6d. a week to the general fund. All estates so purchased were conveyed to trustees for and on behalf of themselves and the several members equally. The trustees had the management, repair, and letting of the property, and their members met monthly, and exercised a general control over the estate, and half-yearly an account was taken of the net rents and proceeds, and they were divided amongst the several shareholders, or further investments were made in estates. The only trust in the deed that could in any way affect the rights of the shareholders as owners in fee was a provision that their shares for the purposes of the association should go to their executors, and be dealt with as personal estate. He did not contend that the trustees had any legal estate; but that they had an equitable estate there could not be a shadow of a doubt.

The claimant and one of the trustees produced the deeds.

The deeds were handed in and examined by the revising barrister, who asked what distinction there was between property conveyed to trustees for the benefit of one individual, and that conveyed to trustees for their own benefit and that of several other individuals?

Mr. James.—None whatever as affecting their right to vote. In support of the claimant he referred to the case of Baxter v. Newman, and contended that it was one that supported the right of the claimant, and he relied on the statement of Lord Chief Justice Tindal, that no declaration that property should be regarded as personality could alter the nature of the estate, and that in equity the Court would deal with such declaration only so far as the object and intent of the deed extended. He believed Mr. Smith relied on the case of Bennett v. Blaine. That case, he contended, was quite distinct from the present, and the judges clearly marked the line which divided that case and those affected by Baxter v. Newman. Mr. James then put in the deeds of conveyance to trustees of the estate, whereby the estates were conveyed to the trustees named in the deed of settlement to the uses and purposes declared therein. He then called the voter, Mr. Ashford, who proved the value of the property was more than sufficient to give each shareholder a vote.

Mr. Smith called attention to the occasion on which, in October, 1856, Mr. Shadwell expunged the name of this and other similar claimants on the list, on the ground that they had not the estate in fee, it being in the trustees, the interest of the claimants only being in personality. He relied on the case of Bennett v. Blaine, as deciding that these persons had no right to vote; that right, if it existed at all, only extended to the trustees, and not to the members of the company. The facts were very clear, and it was simply necessary for him to lay the deed and the case he had referred to before the barrister, and he relied confidently on his upholding the decision of Mr. Shadwell, that these claimants had simply a personality in this estate.

Mr. James replied, citing the instance in which Mr. Shadwell, in 1845, admitted this and similar claimants.

The Barrister (comparing the decisions).—Why, one decision is in the teeth of the other.

Mr. James said, if the barrister would refer to the latter decision, he would see it went only to the extent that the claimant had no legal estate. No doubt, a decision took place on this point, and Mr. Shadwell adhered, as was his wont, to the first view he took of the law, and decided the question somewhat hastily.

The Barrister having recapitulated the arguments that had been used, and quoted the provisions of the deed, said, upon them it appeared conclusive that the parties subscribed money to buy property in which they all had an equal interest and right. It was true it was conveyed to trustees, but for the use and interest of the shareholders; the conveyance was made to trustees only for the sake of convenience in managing and dealing with the property, and the members had equal benefits with the trustees, who were also members. The same observation applied to the provision that, at the death of any one of the holders, his share should go to his executor; that was simply an arrangement for convenience, as the heir-at-law might be an infant. Nothing, he thought, could be stronger on the point in question than the case of Baxter v. Newman, but he did not think Bennett v. Blaine was applicable to this case.

The name was retained, as well as those of the other partners in this property.

Mr. Ashford applied for costs.

The Barrister refused to grant them, shewing that, whilst he did not think the recent case applicable to this one, he thought the objection, after that decision, not an unreasonable one to make.

It appears that Mr. Thomas Hankey, M.P., and Sir M. Peto, M.P., whose names were struck out on the preceding day, on the list at Westminster, are on the register for other parishes in the county of Middlesex.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—The Court of Queen's Bench will hold its first sitting at Nisi Prius, in Michaelmas Term, in Middlesex, on Thursday, Nov. 3; second sitting-day, Wednesday, Nov. 9; third sitting-day (for undefended causes only), on Wednesday, Nov. 16. There will not be any sitting during Term in London. The Court will sit after Term, in Middlesex, on Saturday, Nov. 26, and after Term, in London, on Saturday, Dec. 10. If the causes in the list for the above sitting-days in Term are not disposed of on those days, they will be tried by adjournment on the days following.

The Right Hon. Sir William Erle, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed H. Hawkes, Gent., of Birmingham, Warwickshire, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women in and for the county of Warwick.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—Oct. 5.

DEATH OF MR. COMMISSIONER FANE.—Mr. Registrar Winslow came into court, and addressing the members of the Bar, spoke as follows:—"Gentlemen of the Bar, I suppose you have all heard, as I have, of the death of Mr. Commissioner Fane, whose seat I now occupy. I only heard it since I came to the court. All of us must feel deeply grieved at the death of one who so recently presided here in the administration of justice. If there were no other reason for adjourning the business of the court, I think that a proper feeling of respect to his memory makes it desirable that the public business should not be proceeded with to-day. I shall, therefore, adjourn all public meetings—last examinations and all orders of discharge—to the same hours to-morrow (Thursday); but that the suitors may suffer as little inconvenience as possible, I shall hear and dispose of all the business which a registrar can dispose of in the absence of the Commissioner, in a private room to-day."

Mr. Bagley, on behalf of the Bar, said the course pursued by the learned registrar had the entire approval of the Bar.

Robert George Cecil Fane, the late Commissioner, was born in 1796, and called to the bar in 1819. In 1823 he was appointed one of the old Commissioners in Bankruptcy. In 1832, upon the constitution of the Court of Bankruptcy, he received the appointment which he held till his death. Practically, Mr. Fane has, since the death of Mr. Commissioner Evans, been the senior London Commissioner, for Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, whose appointment is anterior, has during the last two years almost ceased to discharge any judicial functions. Mr. Fane, some years ago, took an active part in bankruptcy reform, having written numerous pamphlets, and been a frequent correspondent with some of the public daily journals on that subject. He also took an active part in the formation and working of railways, and had been a director and chairman of some companies. The deceased gentleman, who was one of the Westmoreland family, is said to have been of a most humane and generous disposition—somewhat hasty and impetuous, perhaps, but frank and prompt to do a benevolent action. He was married twice, and leaves a widow and children. A few days ago he went to Weymouth, and it was believed and hoped he would soon be restored to health, but a severe attack of inflammation of the brain terminated his life in a few hours. His favourite amusement was in the hunting field. He was the very Nimrod of the bench, and has more than once come into court with his arm in a sling, the result of accident in the chase: for though very near sighted, he was a daring rider. His eccentricities on the bench occasionally have brought upon him the censure of the public press. By the 2nd section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, no vacancy in the office of Commissioner in the Court of Bankruptcy in London shall be filled up until the number of Commissioners be reduced to less than three. At present there are nominally the full number, viz. Commissioners Holroyd, Goulburn, and Fonblanque; but the latter is unable, from advanced age and infirmity, to attend, so that in fact there are but two, and they are absent on vacations, after very long and very hard work.

SUDDEN DEATH OF A BARRISTER.—We regret to record the sudden death of Mr. Charles Winston, special pleader (Home Circuit), which took place on Monday afternoon at his chambers, No. 3, Harcourt-buildings, Temple. The deceased had been staying in the country a short time with his family, and only arrived in London in the morning, for the purpose of arranging some of his accounts, his intention being to return by the four o'clock train. His clerk was sent into the city to get a cheque cashed, and on his return found his master lying on the floor apparently dead. He at once called in the assistance of Mr. Broome, gardener of the Temple, and of Dr. Brooks, of Fleet-street, who was of opinion that life had been extinct nearly three-quarters of an hour. The deceased appeared to be in excellent health, and the cause of death is supposed to be disease of the heart. Mr. Serjeant Payne, the coroner, held an inquest on the body of the deceased yesterday afternoon, when Dr. Brooks gave it as his opinion, that death resulted from disease of the heart, produced by overwork, and prolonged abstinence from food. A verdict to that effect was accordingly returned.

Mr. Charles Jerome Murch, of the Western Circuit, has been appointed recorder of Barnstaple and Bideford, in the place of Mr. James Arthur Yonge, deceased.

THE SHIPPING LAW MANUAL: a concise Treatise on the Law governing the Interests of Shipowners, Merchants, Masters, Seamen, and other Persons connected with British Ships. Together with the Acts of Parliament, Forms, and Precedents relating to the subject. Being especially intended for popular use in Seaport Towns. By W. T. GREENHOW, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"The 'Shipping Law Manual,' by Mr. W. T. Greenhow, brings into a popular shape, and to the latest date, the entire body of legal regulations affecting the shipping trade of the country alike in relation to owners, merchants, masters, and seamen, and is especially adapted for ordinary use by all persons connected with the business of seaport towns."—Times, Jan. 31, 1863.

"The object of the author of this book is to popularise the Law of Merchant Shipping, and to compress within the compass of a single volume all that is necessary to be known by those directly interested in British navigation. It was no easy task to condense and arrange this mass of legislation, so as to make it intelligible to the general reader. But Mr. Greenhow has achieved it, and placed within reach of every one connected with shipping a valuable compendium of the law relating to that branch of industry."—Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 15, 1864.

ALTHOUGH in the last session of Parliament no statute was passed which contained any provisions of striking importance, still there were some containing novel and useful enactments, to which we think it may be useful to call the attention of our readers. The first of these is "An Act to enable Joint-stock Companies carrying on Business in Foreign Countries to have Official Seals to be used in such Countries." It applies to companies, under the Companies Act, 1862, which carry on business in any foreign place, and empowers them to have an official seal (the fac-simile of their common seal) to be used in that place, and with the name of the places inscribed on it. This seal may be affixed to any contract or instrument to which the company is a party in such places, by an agent specially appointed, or a local agent or commissioner appointed by the company under their articles of association; the power to affix the seal in such cases to be conferred by an instrument in writing, under the common seal of the company. This power is, by sect. 4, to last during the period mentioned in the instrument conferring the power, or, if no such period is therein mentioned, until notice of its determination shall have been given to the persons dealing with such agent, and all persons claiming under them. This section may give rise to difficulty and dispute. It compels the person "dealing with the company" (which words, we suppose, mean, "contracting with the company"), who probably would be a foreigner, to see whether the power of the agent to affix the seal has not expired; and if no period for its duration is specified, it compels the company to give a notice to that effect, not only to the actual parties to the contract, but to all persons claiming under them; which is a very ambiguous expression. Moreover, when the seal has once been affixed to the instrument there would seem to be an end of the matter; the words "dealing with the agent," &c., are obscure. The 6th section limits the powers given by the statute to companies expressly authorised to exercise the same by their articles of association, or a special resolution passed under the Companies Act, 1862; and the powers are to be exercised subject to the restrictions in the articles or resolution. It would seem, therefore, that the person contracting with the company (probably, a foreigner) must take good care to examine the articles of association, or the resolution, lest he should be met by the "ultra vires" defence when he attempts to enforce his contract. The 7th and last section reminds us, that in the Companies Act, 1862, there is a section—the 55th—which contains a general provision, containing all the powers given by the act of last session, except that it does not empower the company to have a fac-simile seal. The 7th section expressly provides, that this 55th section of the earlier act is still to be in force. Two other statutes were passed relating solely to railway companies; one, cap. 120, "An Act to facilitate in certain Cases the obtaining of further Powers by Railway Companies;" the other (cap. 121), "An Act to facilitate in certain Cases the obtaining of Powers for the Construction of Railways." The provisions of these acts are too numerous to allow of an examination of them in detail. The object of cap. 120 appears to be to save the expense of a special act in cases where two or more companies are desirous of entering into an agreement with respect to the working and managing their respective lines; where a company is desirous of extending the time for sale of superfluous lands, and where it is desirous of raising additional capital; and for these purposes they are to obtain a certificate from the Board of Trade. The object of cap. 121 is to obtain a similar certificate, empowering companies to make railways without a special act, where the landowners and other persons beneficially interested are consenting parties. If these two statutes are well worked, the result must be, a considerable diminution of the business with which parliamentary committees have hitherto been occupied, and a considerable addition to the labours of the Board of Trade. Unless, indeed, the possibility of finding space, and a profitable return for the construction of many more railways is by this time nearly at an end—a conclusion to which a glance at a map of Great Britain, with the railways now made or in course of construction, tends to lead the mind.

Only one short statute has been passed affecting the Divorce Court (27 & 28 Vict. c. 44). It remedies a defect contained in the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21, which only enabled a husband or creditor who wished to obtain the discharge of an order protecting a wife's property, to apply to the very court or magistrate by whom the order was made. It had been decided, that if the particular magistrate who made the order died, or became incapable of acting, the husband or creditor was deprived of the power of applying to discharge it; the act of last session remedies this defect.

The act for the better regulation of street music within the metropolitan police district (c. 55), may be considered a triumph by those individuals through whose exertions it has been passed; but except in cases of sickness, the relief which the act is intended to give will depend very much on the humour of the magistrate who has to decide whether the ordinary occupation or pursuit was such as would, in its nature, be disturbed by street music, or whether there was other reasonable or sufficient cause for the complaint. A man of fortune, and without occupation, for instance, may be in perfect health, but have an aversion to a German band—is this a sufficient cause? Or a party may be playing at cards, and their attention to the game distracted by the melody from without—is this a reasonable cause? Many questions of this nature must arise; but still, most inhabitants of London, and especially those who live in narrow streets, will admit that some more stringent provisions for controlling street music were required.

In an act for granting stamp duties (c. 56), the 19 Geo. 4, c. 87, s. 4, prohibiting reinsurances, except where the insurer becomes bankrupt or insolvent, or dies, is repealed, and such insurances are now made lawful.

The 27 & 28 Vict. c. 95, "An Act to amend the Act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, for compensating the Families of Persons killed by Accident," is a very expedient measure; it often happened, where persons in a humble situation in life were killed by the negligence of others, that either there was no personal representative, or if there was, he was unwilling to bring the action, and so the parties entitled to compensation under the earlier act were without redress. The 1st section of the act of last session enables all or any of the persons for whose benefit the action may be brought to bring it themselves, where there is no personal representative, or where, if there is one, he does not bring the action within six months from the death. The 2nd section relieves defendants in such actions from the difficulty in which they had previously been placed, as to distributing the sums which they wished to pay into court, by paying one entire sum, covering all the claims, without specifying the shares into which it is to be divided.

The last statute to which we would call attention is not the least important of the Legislative measures of the session. It is "An Act to amend the Law relating to future Judgments and Recognisances" (cap. 112), and provides, that "no judgment, statute, or recognisance, to be entered up after the passing of the act, shall affect any land (of whatever tenure) until such land shall have been actually delivered in execution by virtue of a writ of elegit or other lawful authority, in pursuance of such judgment, statute, or recognisance." By the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 1, it was enacted, that lands should not be affected by a judgment, unless a writ of execution was issued and registered; and even then, as to a bonâ fide purchaser, the issuing and registering were of no avail, unless the writ was put in force within three months from the time when it was registered.

The last act compels the execution creditor actually to take the land in execution; for until he has done this he has no lien upon it. Then, under sect. 3, he must register his writ in the name of the debtor; and then, under sect. 4, having taken the land in execution and registered the writ, he may obtain, upon petition in a summary way, an order from the Court of Chancery for the sale of the debtor's interest in such land.

The effect, therefore, of the act is, that as to judgments entered up since the act passed, the facility of transferring land to bonâ fide purchasers is greatly increased. As to previous judgments, the law remains as it was before the act passed.

ON COMPOSITION DEEDS.

In a recent edition of Mr. Hayes's Concise Conveyancer, edited by W. B. Coltman, Esq., the title, "Composition Deeds," has been introduced for the first time. The interest created by the obscure legislation upon this subject induces us to adopt the learned editor's remarks, and reprint them with little variation:—

Before the passing of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, the only power that a majority of creditors had of binding a dissentient minority without referring to the Court, was by an arrangement by deed, under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ss. 224 to 229, which required a majority of six-sevenths in number and value of the creditors whose debts amounted to 10*l.* and upwards. It was held by the Courts, in construing these clauses, that a deed which did not provide for the distribution of the entire estate of the trader^o among the whole of his creditors in bankruptcy did not satisfy the terms of the act, and that the majority of six-sevenths had only power to bind the rest by an arrangement which provided for the distribution of the whole estate[†].

These clauses were repealed by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134; and by the 192nd section of the last-mentioned act it is enacted, that

"Every deed or instrument made or entered into between a debtor and his creditors, or any of them, or a trustee on their behalf, relating to the debts or liabilities of the debtor, and his release therefrom, or the distribution, inspection, management, and winding up of his estate, or any of such matters, shall be as valid and effectual and binding on all the creditors of such debtor as if they were parties to and had duly executed the same, provided the following conditions be observed (that is to say),

"1. A majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors of such debtor whose debts shall respectively amount to 10*l.* and upwards shall, before or after the execution thereof by the debtor, in writing assent to or approve of such deed or instrument.

"2. If a trustee or trustees be appointed by such deed or instrument, such trustee or trustees shall execute the same.

"3. The execution of such deed or instrument by the debtor shall be attested by an attorney or solicitor.

"4. Within twenty-eight days from the day of the execution of such deed or instrument by the debtor, the same shall be produced, and left (having been first duly stamped) at the office of the chief registrar for the purpose of being registered.

"5. Together with such deed or instrument there shall be delivered to the chief registrar an affidavit by the debtor, or some person able to depose thereto, or a certificate by the trustee or trustees, that a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value, of the creditors of the debtor whose debts amount to 10*l.* or upwards, have in writing assented to, or approved of, such deed or instrument, and also stating the amount in value of the property and credits of the debtor comprised in such deed.

"6. Such deed or instrument shall, before registration, bear such ordinary and ad valorem stamp duties as are hereinafter provided.

"7. Immediately on the execution thereof by the debtor, possession of all the property comprised therein, of which the debtor can give or order possession shall be given to the trustees."

In order that a composition deed may be binding

By William Hayes, Esq., barrister-at-law, one of the six conveyancing counsel of the High Court of Chancery. on the creditors who do not assent to it, it must be for the equal benefit of all the creditors, whether they assent to it or not, and whether they execute it or not. (See Walter v. Adcock, 7 H. & Norm. 541; Ex parte Morgan, 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 559; Ex parte Rawlings, Id., p. 1183; Ex parte Godden, 32 L. J., Bank., 37; Iderton v. Castrique, 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 993; and Ex parte Cockburn, 10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 573). And in framing a deed of this nature the draftsman will, of course, take care to let this intention appear clearly on the face of the instrument. It would seem, however, that some of the judges, either from distrust of the policy of the enactment, or from a laudable fear of opening a door to fraud, are disposed to enforce the rule with a strictness which threatens, if universally adopted, to be as effectual in nullifying the provisions of the composition clauses in the act of 1861 as the doctrine established by the case of Taylor v. Teiley was in the case of the similar clauses contained in the act of 1849.

These remarks apply not only to the case of judges from whose known views opinions of this kind might reasonably have been expected, but even to the case of the present Lord Chancellor, who, by the prominent way in which he put himself forward in Parliament as the advocate of the views of the mercantile community with regard to the administration of bankruptcy, had so large a share in procuring the alterations of the law which were inaugurated by the late act.

We may illustrate these observations by referring to the remarks of Lord Westbury in the case of Ex parte Cockburn (10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 573). In that case an instrument, the validity of which was in question, had been made between one Laxton of the first part, his executing creditors of the second part, and all his other creditors of the third part. Besides the creditors who executed the deed, there were included in a schedule attached thereto the names and debts of various non-executing and non-assenting creditors. There was also a considerable number of non-executing and non-assenting creditors whose names did not appear at all in the schedule. By the deed in question, the parties of the second part, in consideration of a composition on their respective debts paid to them by Laxton, released him from all the debts due to them, and from all actions, &c., and Laxton thereby covenanted with the several parties thereto of the second and third parts to pay all his creditors, including the parties thereto of the second part (unless the same should have been paid to them on the day of the date of the deed), a composition of 3d. in the pound on the amount of their respective debts then due and owing by Laxton, either alone, or jointly with any other person or persons. According to the report in THE JURIST, the Lord Chancellor, after stating the provisions of the deed, proceeded to observe, that "the creditors who had not executed the deed, and those who were not named in the schedule, were placed by the deed in a situation very inferior to that of the majority of the creditors. To the latter the composition was paid down, whereas the former had to rely upon the covenant. . . . But, further," continued his Lordship, "it is clear that the creditors who have not executed the deed should not sue upon the covenant of the debtor^o. The covenant is with the parties to the deed of the second and third parts, and as the deed is between parties, no person who is not a party could sue upon the covenant. This clearly follows from the settled principles of law which are illustrated by the case cited in the argument." (Gilby v. Copley, 3 Lev. 138; Melcalfe v. Pycroft, 6 Mau. & S. 9; Berkeley v. Hardy, 5 B. & Cr. 355). "Again: the creditors whose names and debts are not set forth in the schedule, are under a great disadvantage in this respect, namely, that there is no admission by the debtor of the debts due to them respectively. Even, therefore, if any one of such creditors could now come in and execute the deed, and sue upon the covenant, lor meant to say was, that the creditors whose names were not mentioned in the schedules, though expressed to be made parties to the deed under the general description of creditors, could not really be regarded as parties to the instruments, in consequence of their not being made parties nominatim. That this was really the point appears clearly from the argument of Mr. Druce, the counsel for the dissentient creditors; but, with submission, it may be doubted whether the proposition, even when understood in this limited sense, is borne out by the authorities.

It is a well-known maxim of law, that no person, independently of the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 5, can sue on a covenant inter partes who is not a party to the indenture, though it is otherwise in a deed-poll. The question that really arose in Ex parte Cockburn was what constitutes a person a party to an indenture. None of the authorities cited by Mr. Druce bore on this question, as it could not be contended in any of the cases cited that the person, whose right to sue was in question, was made a party either nominated or by any other description.

The objection that parol evidence cannot be admitted to explain a patent ambiguity or to shew who are the parties to a written contract is not more conclusive, as it is obvious that parol evidence must in every case be admissible to shew the identity with the covenantee; and it would seem that parol evidence that the plaintiff was a creditor of the covenantor would be equally admissible. There is in fact no more ambiguity than there would be in a gift to a testator's daughter's husband. The observations of Lord Campbell, in delivering the judgment of the Court of Error, in The Sunderland Marine Insurance Company v. Kearney (20 L. J., Q. B., 421) bear upon this point. "Reliance," said his Lordship, "was placed on the rule laid down in Green v. Horne (1 Sal. 197), that though covenant may be brought on a deed-poll, yet the party must be named in the deed. But it cannot be meant that his name of baptism and surname must necessarily be set out. If he be sufficiently designated in the deed, this must be enough to entitle him to sue for breach of covenant to pay money to the person so designated." It is true that this was the case of a covenant in a deed-poll; but as regards the admissibility of parol evidence, which is the point now in question, there can be no difference between a deed-poll and an indenture.

In Lush's Practice, after stating the rule, it is added, "the reason given is, that the delivery, which is essential to the perfection of a deed, is not made to him (i. e. to the covenantee, who is no party). If it were in fact so, the evidence would not be admissible, as contradicting the language of the deed." And it is added, "in a deed-poll, every person with whom an agreement is made becomes, in fact, a party to it." If this be so, we find a reason for a rule which, at first sight, seems somewhat arbitrary, viz. that the law implies that when a deed is made between parties, they are the sole contracting parties, and consequently no stranger to the deed can sue upon it, inasmuch as the contract was not entered into with him. It is true, that, even in this modified form, the rule, like most other fixed rules of construction, will at times be found to defeat the intention; but this is no reason for pushing its operation further than the principle of construction on which it is founded requires. It is confidently submitted then, that, to use Lord Campbell's expression, it cannot be necessary, in order to constitute a person a party to an indenture, that his name of baptism and surname must necessarily be set out. If he be sufficiently designated as a party, it is enough to entitle him to sue for a breach of covenant.

* It is not for a moment to be supposed (though the words may seem to bear that interpretation), that so able a judge as the Lord Chancellor meant to lay it down as law that a covenantee cannot bring an action on a covenant contained in an indenture which he has not executed. If so, every solicitor who fails to procure the execution of a purchaser or mortgagee is guilty of an act of the greatest negligence. It is evident, however, that what the Lord Chancellor he would be under the necessity of proving the fact, and amount of his debt. But the deed to be binding must be complete at the time it is registered, and it cannot be subsequently executed by any creditor who had not previously assented to or approved of it in writing. Therefore, it is plain there are several creditors in each case who are in a situation of great disadvantage. The deeds have been framed in an imperfect manner. If the names and debts of all the creditors who are not parties to, or have not assented in writing to, the deed, had been included in a distinct schedule, written under the deed, and the amount of the composition on such last-mentioned debts had been deposited in a bank, or with a trustee for such last-mentioned creditors respectively, with directions to pay the amount on demand; and if the debtor had also covenanted with the persons named in such schedule, that he or the trustees respectively should and would pay such composition on demand, it might, perhaps, have been reasonably contended, that all the creditors were, as far as possible, placed in a situation of equality." His Lordship then proceeded to pronounce the deed invalid.

In consequence of the strict construction which, as we have just seen, has been put upon the enactments now under consideration, and of the impossibility, arising from the nature of the case, of ascertaining with absolute certainty the fact that the statement of the debtor contains a full disclosure of all his liabilities, the draftsman, when engaged in framing a composition deed, should take especial care not to insert any clause which, in case any debt shall turn out to have been concealed, may affect the validity of the instrument, by placing the creditor to whom such debt is owing in an inferior position to the rest of the creditors^o. From this cardinal point we may deduce from the observations of the Lord Chancellor, just cited, the following rules, which may be of assistance to persons who may be employed in the preparation of composition deeds:—

1. The composition should not be paid on the execution of the deed, but should be secured by the covenant of the debtor, or otherwise†.
2. The covenant or security should be made with a trustee for all the creditors.
3. No covenant should be entered into with any of the creditors.
4. A schedule of assenting creditors may be introduced; but such schedule should not contain any admission of their debts, or any information which can, by any ingenuity, be construed to give the named creditors any advantage over the other creditors.

To these remarks it may be added, that a covenant which is unreasonable with regard to non-assenting creditors invalidates the deed as against them. Thus, in Wood v. Foote (1 H. & C. 841), a covenant by each of the creditors to indemnify the debtor against any bills of exchange on which he may have incurred liabilities, or indorsed by any of his creditors, and in King v. Dell (2 H. & C. 184), a covenant by the creditors not to sue until the instalments were payable, and that if they did sue, their debts should be released, were held to be unreasonable covenants, and to avoid the deeds in which they were inserted.

It seems, however, that in some cases an unreasonable clause may be rejected, the deed itself being upheld. Thus, in Ex parte Spyer (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 949) it was held, that a power enabling the trustees to make such arrangements with creditors whose debts were under 10*l.*, as they might deem expedient, might be rejected as repugnant to the general tenor of the deed, and that its existence formed no objection to the validity of the instrument.

It may well be doubted whether all the rules given above (which, after the observations of the Lord Chancellor, cited supra, it would hardly be prudent to neglect) are really necessary for the protection of dissentient creditors. It is manifest that they do not tend to facilitate the task of the draftsman on whom the duty of preparing a composition deed may devolve, or to enhance the value of his work when completed. It may, however, reasonably be hoped that the Legislature, seeing the difficulties which have arisen from the imperfections of the recent act of Parliament, will not allow a lengthened period to elapse without passing an act to remove, by a carefully considered and well drawn enactment, some of the difficulties which have arisen from the late alterations in the law of bankruptcy^o.

It seems now to be fully established, that a cessio bonorum is not essential to the validity of a deed operating under this section (see Ex parte Castleton, 31 L. J., Bank., 71; Ex parte Rawlings, 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1183; Ex parte Morgan, Id., p. 559; Ex parte Cockburn, 10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 573; Clapham v. Atkinson, Id., p. 357); though a contrary view was taken by Pollock, C. B., and Martin, B., in the Court of Exchequer, in the case of Walter v. Adcock (8 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 518), Wilde, B., dissentiente. In this case, however, it was not necessary to decide the point†.

In reckoning the required majority of creditors, the secured creditors must be taken into account as well as the unsecured. (Ex parte Godden, 32 L. J., Bank., 85).

Creditors under a trust deed are put in the same position in which creditors under a fiat are placed by the bankrupt law. Secured creditors, therefore, rank under the deed of trust, after deducting the value of their securities. (Ex parte Spyer, 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 949; see also Ex parte Morgan, Id., p. 559). It seems, that where there is no joint estate, the requisite majority of the joint and separate creditors will be sufficient to bind the dissentient minority; but if there is any joint estate, it is at least doubtful whether the requisite majority of each class must not be obtained. (Ex parte Cockburn, 10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 573). It has, however, been suggested by the Lord Chancellor, in the case of Ex parte Spyer (ubi sup.), that under a trust deed

* The writer wishes it to be clearly understood that, in making the preceding observations, he has had no intention of expressing any opinion upon the policy of the late enactment. His observations are merely intended to call attention to the defective manner in which that policy has been embodied in the recent act.

† It must, however, be admitted, that there are considerable difficulties in reconciling the construction adopted by the Court of Appeal in Bankruptcy with other parts of the act. Thus, as pointed out by the Lord Chief Baron in Walter v. Adcock (8 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 518), the 197th section (which applies to all deeds operating under the 192nd section) is unintelligible, unless some property is assigned which may require the protection of the Court; but the act, probably from alterations made in it in its passage through Parliament, is so incoherent, that it is almost hopeless to put a construction on it which shall make all its parts harmonise.

* Of course, no skill of the draftsman can provide for the validity of the deed in a case where the existence of a concealed debt renders the number of assenting creditors insufficient; but in no other case should the concealment of a debt affect the validity of the instrument.

† See the precautions which are recommended by the Lord Chancellor to be taken in case a composition is paid at the time of the execution of the deed, supra. It is evident, however, that the power of taking these precautions must depend on the truth of the bankrupt's statements; hence the advantage to be gained by following the recommendation contained in the text.

some different rule of administration from that which obtains in bankruptcy may be adopted, as, for example, said his Lordship, "that there should be no distinction between joint and separate creditors;" but this is merely an obiter dictum, not necessary for the decision of the case then before the Court, on which, in the absence of an express decision on the point, it would, perhaps, be hardly safe to act. Till the law on this point is authoritatively settled, the safer course would seem to be, to deviate as little as possible from the ordinary practice of bankruptcy.

The 193rd section of the Bankruptcy Act makes further provision for the registration of instruments operating under the 192nd section; and the 194th section provides, that "Every deed, instrument, or agreement whatsoever, by which a debtor, not being a bankrupt, conveys, or covenants or agrees to convey, his estate and effects, or the principal part thereof, for the benefit of his creditors, or makes any arrangement or agreement with his creditors, or any person on their behalf, for the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, or winding up of his affairs or estate, or the release or discharge of such debtor from his debts or liabilities, shall, within twenty-eight days from and after the execution thereof by such debtor, or within such further time as the Court in London shall allow, be registered in the Court of Bankruptcy, and in default thereof shall not be received in evidence.

As to the effect of this section, see Hodgson v. Wightman (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 308) and Ex parte Morgan (Id., p. 559).

The 195th section prohibits any deed or instrument requiring registration as aforesaid from being registered, unless, in addition to the ordinary stamp duty, it also be impressed with, or have affixed to it, a stamp denoting a duty computed at the rate of 5s. upon every 100l., or fraction of 100l., of the sworn or certified value of the estate or effects comprised in or to be collected or distributed under such deed or instrument, with a proviso that the maximum of ad valorem duty payable in respect of any such deed or instrument shall be 200l.

And the 197th section provides, that from and after the registration of every such deed or instrument in manner aforesaid, the debtor and creditor and trustees, parties to such deed, or who have assented thereto or are bound thereby, shall, in all matters relating to the estate and effects of such debtor, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, and shall respectively have the benefit of, and be liable to, all the provisions of this act, in the same or like manner as if the debtor had been adjudged a bankrupt, and the creditors had proved, and the trustees had been appointed creditors' assignees under such bankruptcy; and the existing or future trustees of any such deed or instrument, and the creditors under the same, shall, as between themselves respectively and as between themselves and the debtor and against third persons, have the same powers, rights, and remedies with respect to the debtor and his estate and effects, and the collection and recovery of the same, as are possessed or may be used or exercised by assignees or creditors with respect to the bankrupt or his acts, estate, and effects in bankruptcy; and, except where the deed shall expressly provide otherwise, the Court shall determine all questions arising under the deed according to the law and practice in bankruptcy, so far as they may be applicable, and shall have power to make and enforce all such orders as it would be authorised to do if the debtor in such deed had been adjudged bankrupt, and his estate was administered in bankruptcy.

As to the effect of this section, see Ex parte Alexander (32 L. J., Bank., 55)

By the 200th section it is enacted, that if a debtor cannot obtain the assent of a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of his creditors, by reason of his being unable to ascertain by whom bills of exchange, promissory notes, or other negotiable securities accepted, drawn, made, or indorsed by him are holden, or by reason of the absence of creditors in a foreign country, or other similar circumstances, it shall be sufficient if he obtain the consent of a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of all his other creditors to such deed or instrument as aforesaid: provided that notice shall have been inserted by or on behalf of the debtor in one or more newspapers published in the county or place at which he shall have carried on business immediately prior to the date of such deed or instrument, requiring his creditors to signify their assent to, or dissent from, such deed or instrument, by notice in writing, addressed to the trustee or trustees thereof, within fourteen days from the insertion of such notice, and that the affidavit or certificate of the trustee or trustees shall state the circumstances of the case, and the same shall be allowed by the Court; and provided the deed or instrument be in such form as is expressed in Schedule D. to this act annexed, which shall vest all the estate and effects of the debtor in the trustees of such deed; and provided that all such other conditions as are hereinbefore required be duly complied with.

THE CONSOLIDATED GENERAL ORDERS of the HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY; with Regulations as to certain Fees and Charges.

"The new arrangement of the Orders leaves nothing to be wished for: it is clear, convenient, and admirably adapted for the purposes of practice. Although the language of the old Orders has been adhered to as far as possible, it has been altered whenever it was found necessary for the purpose of adapting them to the present practice, and also for the purpose of removing those doubts and difficulties which so frequently arose under the old Orders."—Jurist, Jan. 21, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 22, 1864.

THE learned and able address on law reform, delivered by Sir J. P. Wilde at the recent meeting of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science (and reported ante, p. 375), has attracted an amount of public attention commensurate with the high reputation of its distinguished author, and the general interest now felt in the subject itself. It would be, perhaps, somewhat premature to say at present that time was when law was "the science of the few—the mystery of the many;" but there can be no doubt that every year increases the number of scientific lawyers, who are also law reformers, and the number of educated laymen, who are qualified to understand and forward the practical amendment of the law. The abundant light which the researches of modern inquirers have thrown upon the history of our jurisprudence has dispelled much of that superstitious reverence which formerly clung to a system whose origin and formation had been little investigated, and whose very absurdities were supposed to be in some way interwoven and connected with the continued growth and prosperity of the country. The euphemistic language in which Blackstone habitually speaks of the then existing state of the law now provokes only a smile, and the student who peruses Lord Coke's celebrated discussion on the antiquity and excellence of the "English customs" (6 Rep., Pref.), and perceives that that great judge really appears to have thought that, at a period before the Roman invasion, "this realm was still ruled with the self-same customs that it is now governed withal," finds some difficulty in understanding how so learned a man could have been so ignorant of the real history of the legal system he had spent his life in studying and administering. Lord Coke, it is true, rather qualifies his broad assertions by adducing proofs of the antiquity of three or four points only of customary law; and it is not probable that many jurists since his time have based their defence of existing abuses on a genuine belief of their primeval antiquity. Yet it is only in comparatively modern times that our legal system has been generally regarded as something which might be investigated without profanation, and modified without sacrilege. Every reader of Twiss's Life of Lord Eldon must remember the piteous lamentations with which his Lordship hailed each successive law reform, and the varied terms in which, in his private correspondence, he constantly reiterated his sincere convictions that the system of legal procedure under which he had grown old, famous, and rich, could not be seriously interfered with without causing great, if mysterious, evils, and bringing on ultimately the decadence and ruin of the country. It is not easy, at the present time, to sympathise with, or even to understand, the state of mind which could suggest these forebodings; and we hardly know whether to be more surprised that so eminent a judge could be so narrow-minded a man, or that so narrow-minded a man could have attained such eminence as a judge. There is however, little doubt that Lord Eldon's apprehensions met at the time with a degree of sympathy, which is all the more incomprehensible, when we consider the limited scope of the reforms which called them forth. The alarm expressed could hardly have been greater, if it had been proposed at one step to substitute the Codes Napoleon for the existing body of common and statutory law; yet little was actually attempted beyond the removal of abuses, whose simple mention one would have thought would have been their sufficient condemnation. The main rules and principles of our law have not only remained unchanged, but there has been no serious attempt to change even those of them whose expediency has been most questioned. If the institution of the Divorce Court be cited as an instance to the contrary, it must be remembered that the indissolubility of marriage if still maintained as a theoretical principle of our law, had been long departed from by the admission of private divorce acts, which, where the necessary evidence was forthcoming, proceeded with the same regularity as the ordinary litigation in the courts. The system of our law has for the most part remained unaltered, and little more has hitherto been effected or attempted than to render the law itself more accessible to the suitor. Few, if any, of the most inveterate praisers of past times have been bold enough to maintain that expense, delay, and uncertainty in the administration of the law were not in themselves evils; and, as Sir James Wilde has well pointed out, the efforts of law reformers since the year 1828 have been almost entirely directed to the clearing away of these artificial obstacles to the avenues of justice. The progress of reform has, it is true, been very slow. The new pleading rules of 1834 inaugurated a vicious system, which, having been fortunately reduced to an absurdity by the great acuteness of the judges who administered it, has been abandoned among the general congratulations of the profession and the public. Many other mistakes have, no doubt, been made, but if our existing procedure is compared with that of 1828, there can be little question as to the great advance that has taken place. The work of reform in this branch, if not entirely done, is certainly in the way of being done. Common law and equity now vie with each other in celerity and economy, as they formerly competed in delay and expense, and the gradual extension to each of these jurisdictions of those powers and remedies which the experience of the other has shewn to be beneficial, will probably pave the way to a well-considered amalgamation of their functions. The time has come for a further advance, and the consideration of questions of even greater weight and moment than those which have hitherto been entertained. "Is the law itself free from defects of a similar character to those which have disfigured its procedure? To what extent can it lay claim to simplicity, certainty, clearness, and unerring justice? Above all, what can we say of its compactness, whose principles wander at large through the pages of 300 volumes, and the leaves of whose oracles lie as they first fell, scattered and unsewn."

Such are the topics which Sir James Wilde has proposed for present consideration; and it must be admitted that we shall be more fortunate than we have any reason to expect if any general concurrence of opinion upon them can be arrived at within a period of time not greater in length than that which has been consumed in setting in order the mere machinery of the law.

The formation of a digest or authoritative classification of our existing law, is the practical step which Sir James appears to think presses most for our adoption. There can be little doubt that he is right. Before an attempt is made to modify rules of law, it is above all things necessary to understand clearly what those rules really are; and a measure which facilitates the acquisition of this knowledge will be at once the surest preventive of rash and ill-considered alterations, and the best (if not the indispensable) assistant of rational reform. Sir James refers to the well-known works of Comyn and Bacon, as illustrations of the species of digest he would propose. He might, perhaps, have found a more apt example in the recent Treatise on the Construction of Wills, by Mr. Vaughan Hawkins. If the industry of an individual barrister has been able to embody in the small number of lucid rules which are found in Mr. Hawkins's work the vast and complicated mass of cases on testamentary construction, the formation of a similar digest of the whole law can present no difficulty worthy of being considered as a real obstacle to so great a national advantage. It is well known that the Lord Chancellor has long been in favour of a similar plan; and we believe that, if it has not been already commenced, the fault does not lie with his Lordship. It is not, perhaps, to be wondered at if the waste of money that has already been caused by some ill-considered projects of law reform, has rendered the Government slow to adopt a scheme whose magnitude must necessarily involve considerable expense. We hope that the recommendations of Sir James Wilde, followed, as we trust they will be, by those of other eminent men, may lead to the carrying out of this great design in a manner worthy of the noble principles of law which form its subject-matter, and of the country on which its fulfilment will confer an inestimable benefit.

Reviews.

Maude and Pollock on the Law of Merchant Shipping.
Third Edition. [H. Sweet.]

THE author of a law book on any subject of importance, who sincerely desires that his work should continue of use to those for whom it is written, undertakes a life-long labour. Month by month, and even day by day, new decisions are pronounced, or old ones overruled, which may affect the propositions laid down in his book, and so, to a certain extent, destroy its value as a book of authority; acts of Parliament, also, are passed, which alter the law on the subject, and perhaps renders part of his work useless, or even unsafe; and thus an author must be ever on the watch to collect materials, and when the proper time arrives, he embodies them in a new edition.

There are few legal subjects to which these remarks will more forcibly apply than the law of merchant shipping. The shipping interest of this country is so enormous, the amount of money invested in it, in one way or another, so large, and the disputes that arise on shipping contracts, and all matters connected with sea risks, consequently so numerous, that the subject is constantly before the Courts, and fresh decisions, either confirming or developing the law, occupy a great part of the reports. Several very important statutes have also been passed of late years, which must necessarily be incorporated in any book professing to give the whole law of shipping.

The Profession, therefore, will, we believe, hail with pleasure the third edition of Messrs. Maude and Pollock's work, which has established for itself a deserved reputation. That it was necessary will appear from the statement of the learned authors in the Preface, "that since the second edition, in 1861, the statute law relating to merchant shipping has undergone further changes; the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, and the Passengers Act Amendment Act, not to mention other statutes of minor importance, have all been added to the written law on the subject. Under the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act new and important regulations have been issued for preventing collisions at sea, and these rules have been adopted by the Government of France and of several other countries.

"Many cases have also been decided on the earlier and recent statutes, and open the questions dealt with in this work."

This statement proves the never-ending labour of a conscientious and pains-taking author; and the labour is increased by the tendency of our Courts of late years to admit the American reports and text-books as authorities—or rather, as aids in forming their judgments upon points on which there is no direct authority in this country.

This third edition has been prepared with the same care which marked the two first editions, and appears to contain all the recent statutes, and all the fresh cases of any importance which have been decided since the date of the last edition.

PROCEEDINGS IN BANKRUPTCY.

IN April last the Lord Chancellor, displeased with the accounts of the official assignees and messengers of the Court of Bankruptcy for the Leeds district, requested Mr. Commissioner Ayrton, one of the commissioners there, and Mr. Harding, the well-known London accountant, to institute a rigid examination and scrutiny of all their books, and to report to him on the subject. The result of this investigation turned out to be of so very lamentable a character, that his Lordship, immediately it was made known to him, followed up his request by issuing an order directing a similar proceeding as to the accounts of every official assignee and messenger in all the district courts in the country, with power also to inquire into the manner in which the bills of costs were taxed by the registrars of the various courts. That order was dated the 20th May last, and is as follows:—

"Lord Chancellor.—In Bankruptcy.

"Friday, May 20, 1864.

"Whereas defaults have from time to time been made by several of the official assignees of the Court of Bankruptcy, and serious losses have thereby been occasioned to creditors under bankrupt estates, and it is desirable that such occurrences should be prevented for the future; and whereas, from a recent investigation directed by me into the accounts of the official assignees and messengers of the Court of Bankruptcy for the Leeds district, it appears to me to be expedient that the books and accounts of every official assignee and messenger of the court should undergo a similar investigation; and whereas I deem it necessary also to inquire into the manner in which the taxation of bills of costs by the registrars, both at Leeds and in the other district courts, is conducted: now, by virtue of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and of every authority vested in me, I do hereby give power and authority to William Scrope Ayrton, Esq., one of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy for the Leeds district, and Robert Palmer Harding, of Bank-buildings, Lothbury, in the city of London, accountant, to make further inquiry into the matter aforesaid in the Court of Bankruptcy for the Leeds district, and also to investigate and make inquiry into such matters in the Courts of Bankruptcy at Birmingham, Bristol, Exeter, Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle, and to report fully to me thereon, with power to them to examine such persons, and to call for the production of such books, papers, and proceedings, as they may think fit.

"WESTBURY, C."

We believe the inquiry under this order has been completed, so far as regards the courts at Leeds, Birmingham, Manchester, and Liverpool, and the result is that, besides the discovery of many very gross irregularities, it has been found that large sums of money have been improperly retained, both by the official assignees and by the messengers, which ought to have been paid over to the chief registrar's account—sums, we are told, already amounting in the aggregate to upwards of 14,000*l*. The examinations at Leeds and Birmingham were, we believe, completed in time to be communicated to the Parliamentary Committee on Bankruptcy, and as the evidence taken before that committee, and an appendix containing a variety of documents that were called for, will be printed in the course of a few days, the public will soon have an opportunity of forming a judgment on the importance of the inquiry directed by the Lord Chancellor, and still in course of prosecution, and on the disclosures which have hence come to light. If all we hear be true, we are only afraid that his Lordship will very generally be considered to have been but too lenient with the offenders—to have erred on the side of mercy. We believe it is his Lordship's intention that the inquiry shall be extended to the accounts of the official assignees and messengers acting in London.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—Oct. 19.

[Before Mr. Registrar WINSLOW, sitting for Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE.]

Re A TRUST DEED.

Mr. F. P. Campbell applied on affidavits for leave to registrar a trust deed, nunc pro tunc, under the following circumstances:—The commissioner in the country, before whom the affidavits were made, had accidentally omitted to initial with his signature some of the pages of the account annexed to the deed, and the registrar of deeds, in consequence, refused to register the instrument. The twenty-eight days allowed for registration by the statute had expired, and it was necessary to have the direction of the court to supply the omission.

The Registrar said it was of the greatest importance that regularity should be observed in such matters, and that the parties in deed cases should have their papers complete. The mistake had not occurred through the negligence of any officer of that court, and he, therefore, felt bound to refuse the application.

CIRCUIT BUSINESS.—A paragraph appeared in The Times a few days since, shewing the number of causes disposed of on each circuit in England and Wales in 1861 and 1862. The total amount recovered in 1862 on promissory notes, &c., was 14,764*l.*, against 17,574*l.* in 1861; on bonds, 457*l.*, against 302*l.* in 1861; for goods sold and delivered, 13,146*l.*, against 9597*l.* in 1861; for work and labour done, 4384*l.*, against 3365*l.* in 1861; for money paid, advanced, &c., 5329*l.*, against 6517*l.* in 1861; for money received, 3714*l.*, against 3816*l.* in 1861; for compensation for personal injuries, 9514*l.*, against 14,525*l.* in 1861; for compensation for other injuries, 6873*l.*, against 1870*l.* in 1861; for replevin or distress for rent, 1129*l.*, against 829*l.* in 1861; trover or detinue, 4671*l.*, against 5346*l.* in 1861; for breach of contract, 10,256*l.*, against 13,277*l.* in 1861; upon special contracts, 31,906*l.*, against 47,853*l.* in 1861; for breach of warranty, 1635*l.*, against 98*l.* in 1861; for infringement of patents, nil, against 2*l.* in 1861; for recovery of land, &c., 1422*l.*, against 2*l.* in 1861; trespass relative to land, &c., nil, against 7314*l.* in 1861; questions on wills, 3308*l.*, against nil in 1861; for breach of promise of marriage, 1830*l.*, against 3800*l.* in 1861; seduction, 740*l.*, against 707*l.* in 1861; libel, 315*l.*, against 1498*l.* in 1861; slander, 888*l.*, against 1016*l.* in 1861; malicious prosecution, 80*l.*, against 590*l.* in 1861; false imprisonment, 239*l.*, against 380*l.* in 1861; assault, 469*l.*, against 843*l.* in 1861; and other suits, 11,229*l.*, against 26,704*l.* in 1861; making a total of 128,298*l.*, against 167,325*l.* in 1861, and 79,777*l.* in 1860. In 1422 causes tried in 1862, verdicts for the plaintiff were given in 836 cases; in 178 cases, verdicts for the defendants; and in 408 cases nonsuits were either entered or jurors were withdrawn, &c.

THE HIGHWAY ACT, 1862.—At the quarter sessions held for the county of Monmouth, at Usk, on Monday last, Lord Llanover, who had acted as chairman of the Committee of Justices, moved that the provisional orders for the adoption of the act throughout the county, which were made at the previous sessions, be confirmed. Lord Tredegar seconded the motion, which was supported by Colonel Clifford, M.P., Mr. Morgan, M.P., and others. Captain Tyler opposed it; and Sir Thomas Phillips moved, and Mr. Williams, of Llanjibby Castle, seconded, an amendment that the further consideration of the subject be adjourned to the January sessions. On the question being put from the chair, the original motion was carried by a large majority. The election of waywardens was then fixed for the 25th March, and the first meeting of the board will take place on the 31st March.

WEST RIDING ASSIZES.—An Order in Council some time ago directed, that prisoners committed for offences in the West Riding of Yorkshire should no longer be sent to York Castle to await their trial at the assizes, but since an assizes for the West Riding was to be held at Leeds, they should be committed to either the Leeds Gaol or the Wakefield House of Correction. Under these circumstances, the West Riding magistrates have sought to relieve themselves from the payment of about 3000*l.* a year, which they have hitherto had to make towards the expenses of the Castle; and they appointed a committee some time ago to confer with the North and East Riding justices on the subject. In the deliberations which followed, it turned out that the contributions of the three Ridings were in the following proportions:—West Riding, 13s.; North Riding, 3s. 9d.; East Riding, 3s. 3d. The West Riding justices suggested, that in future the West Riding should only be charged the average daily cost for each prisoner sent from their Riding to the Castle; but the North and East Riding magistrates were in a majority, and carried a resolution, deciding that the expenses of the establishment and fabric should be borne by each Riding according to the rateable value of each, and the cost of each prisoner be as before suggested. As in the Castle there were only six debtors, and one criminal from the West Riding (the criminal being retained at the Governor's request, in order that he might assist in clearing the wards), the committee recommended that an act of Parliament should be applied for, authorising the sale, lease, or other disposal of the West Riding interest in York Castle, and relieving the West Riding from further contributions to that establishment. The same course they recommended should be taken with reference to the judges' lodgings at York, which were originally purchased at a cost of 6000*l.*, of which sum the West Riding paid 2787*l.* On Monday these matters came before the West Riding court of quarter sessions at Leeds, and Mr. Greenwood stated, with respect to the judges' lodgings, that the North and East Riding magistrates were anxious to get rid of them, their opinion being that the judges of assize would be much better accommodated at the Royal Station Hotel. After a good deal of discussion it was agreed, that as, since the holding of assizes at Leeds, York Castle was useless to the West Riding, steps be taken to obtain an act of Parliament, if, after further conference with the North and East Riding magistrates, it should be necessary. The committee are to report, at the Wakefield sessions in January, whether any agreement has been come to, and the West Riding Court will then determine whether a copy of a proposed bill, which is then to be presented to them, shall be proceeded with.

A CASE occurred on Wednesday at the Westminster Police Court, before Mr. Arnold, under a clause in the Fraudulent Trustees Act, of which the following are the particulars:—

Mr. Dunbar John Cother, late of 26, Denbigh-street, Pimlico, barrister-at-law, was charged on a warrant with fraudulently converting two bills of exchange for 100*l.* to his own use, the same being a larceny under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3.

Mr. Butler Rigby, barrister, prosecuted; and Mr. Edward Lewis, of Marlborough-street, defended.

Prisoner had been remanded for a week, but being unable to find the required bail, two sureties of 100*l.* each, he was brought up from the House of Detention.

Mr. Rigby said that he appeared on behalf of Mr. Charles Parker, a gentleman residing at Bentley, near Doncaster, to prosecute the prisoner for misappropriating two bills of exchange, and the proceeds thereof. The prisoner advertised in the name of "Junius," 103, Jermyn-street, St. James's, to get money for gentlemen, and also to cash bills of exchange, referring persons to a gentleman of the name of Collins. He became acquainted in this manner with Mr. Parker, the complainant, in September, and he volunteered to obtain discount for him on two bills of exchange of 50*l.* each. Having first ascertained that the reference was correct, Mr. Parker sent two blank acceptances and stamps to cover 50*l.* each to prisoner, for the purpose of getting them cashed and handing over the proceeds to him. They remained in his possession for some time, and Mr. Parker made several applications for the proceeds, but could never get the money. He received various letters from the prisoner. It was sufficient to say, he made all sorts of excuses, and in one he admitted putting part of the proceeds on a horse-race, in betting upon which his client indulged. Mr. Parker would tell the magistrate that he never authorised the prisoner to bet with that money, and complainant finding that he could not get the money, came to town and saw the prisoner about the bills who referred him to a Mr. Collins. Collins told complainant that the bills had been discounted, but would not tell him the holders of the bills. He said, "You will know soon enough, for if they are not paid when they become due, you will be sued for the value." He would prove that the prisoner had received the proceeds of the bills, and that he had never handed one farthing to Mr. Parker, and then leave the matter in his worship's hands. He then called Mr. Parker.

Mr. Lewis having ascertained that the proceedings were taken under the 3rd section of the act, submitted that there was no case in which his worship could adjudicate. In the case of Reg. v. Vassall it was held, that the bailment intended by the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54, s. 4, was a deposit of something in itself to be returned, and therefore a person with whom money was deposited, who was under an obligation to return the amount, but not the identical coin, was held not to be a bailee of the money within that section.

After some further legal discussion,

Mr. Arnold observed, it was a very important case, and as Mr. Rigby did not seem prepared to reply to Mr. Lewis's objection, he would remand the case for a week. After the case Mr. Lewis had quoted, which he thought bore very strongly on the present prosecution, and as the prisoner had not been able to find the required sureties for his reappearance, and consequently been a week in prison, he would take his personal recognisance in 200*l.* for his reappearance that day week, entertaining, as he did, a strong impression of the force of Mr. Lewis's argument.

THE SHIPPING LAW MANUAL: a concise Treatise on the Law governing the Interests of Shipowners, Merchants, Masters, Seamen, and other Persons connected with British Ships. Together with the Acts of Parliament, Forms, and Precedents relating to the subject. Being especially intended for popular use in Seaport Towns. By W. T. GREENHOW, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"The 'Shipping Law Manual,' by Mr. W. T. Greenhow, brings into a popular shape, and to the latest date, the entire body of legal regulations affecting the shipping trade of the country alike in relation to owners, merchants, masters, and seamen, and is especially adapted for ordinary use by all persons connected with the business of seaport towns."—Times, Jan. 31, 1863.

"The object of the author of this book is to popularize the Law of Merchant Shipping, and to compress within the compass of a single volume all that is necessary to be known by those directly interested in British navigation. It was no easy task to condense and arrange this mass of legislation, so as to make it intelligible to the general reader. But Mr. Greenhow has achieved it, and placed within reach of every one connected with shipping a valuable compendium of the law relating to that branch of industry."—Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 29, 1864.

THE case of Topping v. Keysell (10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 774; 33 L. J., O. P., 225) raises, and does not decide, the question, how far trustees under a deed of composition are clothed with the rights and powers of assignees in bankruptcy. The facts of the case were—that the debtor, being indebted to several creditors, assigned to B., one of them, all his property, by bill of sale, nominally for further advances of goods, but really for the debt already due. A few days afterwards another creditor, C., applied to the debtor for payment of his debt, and was told by him, that all the property on the premises was already assigned to the former creditor for 90*l*., which he owed him. C. then took goods in discharge of his debt. The next day, B., having made no further advance, entered and took possession under his bill of sale, and sold off the property. A third creditor having filed a petition for adjudication in bankruptcy against the debtor, which was not proceeded with, the debtor executed a deed of assignment to trustees, under sect. 192 of the Bankruptcy Act; the deed of assignment conveyed the effects already included in the bill of sale. The trustees then claimed from C. the goods which he had taken in discharge of his debt, and the principal point in the case was, whether the title of the trustees dated from the execution of the deed of assignment, or could be retrospective, as in the case of assignees in bankruptcy.

The 197th section of the Bankrupt Act enacts, "that the existing or future trustees of any such deed or instrument, and the creditors under the same, shall, as between themselves respectively, and as between themselves and the debtor and against third persons, have the same powers, rights, and remedies, with respect to the debtor and his estate, and effects, and the collection and recovery of the same, as are possessed or may be used or exercised by assignees or creditors with respect to the bankrupt, or his acts, estate, and effects in bankruptcy; and, except where the deed shall expressly provide otherwise, the Court shall determine all questions arising under it according to the law and practice in bankruptcy."

It was argued on behalf of the creditor D., that the trustees under the deed were in the same position as assignees of a bankrupt who was adjudicated bankrupt on his own petition; in which case the petition is considered the act of bankruptcy, and the only act of bankruptcy to which there can be any relation back; so that dealings by the bankrupt with his property anterior to his petition are protected. On the other hand, it was argued for the trustees, that they were in the same position as assignees of a bankrupt where the petition for adjudication is filed by a creditor. The judgment of the Court, unfortunately, lays down no general rule, and leaves the application of the section and the rights of the trustees to be governed by the terms of each particular deed. The Chief Justice rests his judgment upon the ground, "that the deed being executed according to the provisions of the 192nd section, conveyed the whole of the debtor's property, and was intended to give the creditors the same rights as would be given by a bankruptcy." Now, these expressions appear to leave the point which had been argued still undecided. There is no doubt the trustees are to have the rights of assignees in bankruptcy, but the question is, whether the bankruptcy is to be considered as founded on the bankrupt's petition or on a creditor's petition. The question, surely, cannot be decided by the language of the deed, which is the language of the bankrupt himself. It cannot be that he, and not the law, is to regulate the rights of his creditors, unless the words in the 197th section, "and, except where the deed shall expressly provide otherwise, the Court shall determine all questions arising under the deed, according to the law and practice in bankruptcy, so far as they may be applicable," enable him to do so; but even these words leave the question open, for the law of bankruptcy is, that in case of a bankruptcy on a debtor's own petition, there is no relation back. We, therefore, must think that the ground on which the Chief Justice rests his judgment is hardly satisfactory, and at all events it lays down no rule which can serve as a guide in other cases.

Mr. Justice Willes is of opinion, that the 197th section confers upon the trustees "rights at least equal to those of assignees where a trader has become bankrupt on his own petition;" and he adds, "Now, which of these different relations am I to apply to the administration of the debtor's property under the present deed, where the terminus a quo—the point of time when the title of the trustees is to commence—is not stated by the Legislature. I will not say that in all cases the trustees under deeds within the 197th section possess the right of carrying back their title to an earlier period than the date of the deed, because it must be remembered, that the better opinion seems now to be, that it is not necessary that the whole, or any part, of the debtor's property should be assigned by such deeds, but that an undertaking to pay a certain composition, is within the act of Parliament. There may, therefore, be some doubt what are the rights of the trustees under such deeds as these, in disputes similar to that which arises in the present case. Such a question would certainly present very considerable difficulty. It may be that there is no power in the trustees to collect the funds beyond that which is provided by the debtor." His Lordship then expresses his opinion, that where a debtor conveys his whole estate under such a deed, all the estate must be intended which could be vested in assignees under a bankruptcy.

This judgment, therefore, also leaves the application of sect. 197 to be governed by the language of the deed. The judgment of Mr. Justice Byles is founded on the fact, that in the particular case a creditor had petitioned for an adjudication in bankruptcy, although it was subsequently abandoned. He admits the difficulty of the general question, and leaves it undecided.

One thing, therefore, seems clear, from this judgment, that a deed under the 197th section may be so worded as to secure and protect transactions which would be void under a bankruptcy founded on a petition by a creditor, and that without such language such transactions are not protected as against the trustees, if the debtor conveys all the property to them; as by such a conveyance it must be intended that he conveys all the property which would pass to his assignees on a bankruptcy so founded. The probability is, that many questions will arise in consequence of this decision on the construction and effect of such deeds. So far as we can judge from the deeds which have been before the Court, creditors appear to be willing to let the debtor keep his property and pay a composition; and in such cases any previous dealings with his estate will not be interfered with. We suppose the answer is, that the creditors look closely into the debtor's previous conduct, and are not likely, if they think he has been guilty of fraudulent preference, or other irregular dealings, to acquiesce in it—they would then make him a bankrupt, and invalidate such transactions. This may be the case; but there can be no reason why sect. 197 should not have been more explicit and satisfactory as to the rights of trustees under these deeds, unless, indeed, it be, that had it been clear and easy of construction, it would by the contrast have added to the censure and abuse which have been heaped upon its unfortunate neighbour. (Sect. 192).

There was another point argued in the case of Topping v. Keysell, namely, whether the communication made by the debtor to the creditor C., that he had executed the bill of sale to B., was notice to C. of an act of bankruptcy. The county court judge, from whose decision the case in the Common Pleas was an appeal, directed the jury that it was not notice of an act of bankruptcy, and asked them whether they thought the debtor was "coaxed" out of the goods by C. We were aware that pressure by a creditor on a debtor for payment of his debt, such as a threat of legal proceedings, prevented a transaction being a fraudulent preference; but "coaxing" is a new term in the law. Willes, J., observes, "I am at loss to understand what the learned county court judge could have meant by saying, that if the bankrupt had been 'coaxed' out of his property, the transfer of the goods was not voluntary. If the transfer was substantially a voluntary one, it does not matter whether the bankrupt was 'coaxed' or not. If an influence of this nature were to be held available, it would be necessary to have some legal definition of what 'coaxing' is."

THE MARRIAGE LAW*.

(From the Times).

IN the month of June, 1863, Lord Chancellor Westbury brought in his bill for the revision of our statute law. After pointing out the evils arising from the enormous amount of uncertainty contained in the decisions of our Courts, as shewn by the reported cases, and after stating that our statute-book was a mass of enactments and statutes which are in a great degree discordant and irreconcilable, he went on to say, that it was to the form of a code that the law of any advanced nation ought to be reduced. The judge of the Court of Probate, at the late meeting of the Society for Promoting Social Science, made want of system and harmony in our laws the groundwork of his admirable address; but he did not propound as a remedy, even if our statute law were revised and consolidated, or our reports were weeded of unsound and conflicting decisions, a code; but he recommended that a digest should be the ultimate embodiment of our laws. "A code," he says, "is the offspring of large and comprehensive views, and should deal with all subjects as a whole. A digest with a narrower aim may properly be worked out piecemeal." From this we infer that a code must necessarily, as the Code of Justinian and the Code of Napoleon, contain all the extant law; but is this so? The term "code" is not, perhaps, the most appropriate for the reformers of our law; it implies too much. According to the meaning it has acquired, a code is to comprise the whole body of the law of a State when reduced into a systematic form. Thus, the Lord Chancellor told the Legislature, "that a code should be the ultimate form into which our laws should be reduced; but, as the law is still in a state of transition, we must wait until it is settled." With the varying circumstances arising almost from day to day in our transactions, our law must ever remain in a state of transition; and if we are to wait until it is on all points definitively settled, we shall never get an epitome or consolidation of our laws in the shape of a digest or a code, or any other form. If a digest may be worked out piecemeal, as Sir James Wilde thinks it may, why not a code? Each branch of our law might be treated separately, and those which are settled or supposed might be summarily dealt with without delay. In the volume before us, this is done with regard to the law of marriage, at one time a very complex subject; but the decisions of our Courts, and the statutes regulating it, have made it pretty clear and definitive, so that we have here the law of marriage enunciated in abstract propositions, arranged in a concise and logical sequence under different heads. We conceive the law as set forth by Dr. Waddilove to be sound, and if so, any person may at a glance learn what constitutes a valid marriage, and what does not, and in what manner it may be contracted. One object of the work appears to be to shew, that one branch of our law may be codified without waiting until our statute-book has been revised and expurgated. This would appear a self-evident truth; but the words of Lord Chancellor Westbury seem to tend towards a different doctrine. His Lordship, in introducing his bill for the revision of our statutes, expressed a hope that the complete revision and expurgation of our statute-book would be effected in a year; more than that time has elapsed, but we have heard no more on the subject. We hope that during that time progress has been made in the work; but we would wish to learn something to relieve us from suspense, and we trust that his Lordship, having made this promise to the ear, will not break it to the hope.

The Lord Chancellor will receive the judges, Queen's counsel, &c., at his Lordship's residence, No. 1, Upper Hyde Park-gardens, on Wednesday, the 2nd November next (the first day of Michaelmas Term), at twelve o'clock.

TWO OLD LETTERS.

It is so seldom that the "lay" side of legal antiquities is brought to light, that a letter, which is to be found in the Rev. Joseph Stevenson's recent volume of "Letters and Papers illustrative of the Wars of the English in France, during the Reign of Henry VI," is of especial interest. The letter appears to be written on the 3rd September, 1440, by Mrs. Isabella Wydecombe (Widdicombe), formerly Mrs. Miles, to her son, William Miles, then a merchant at Rone (Rouen). The letter runs thus:—

"Worschepfulle and right enterly welbelovyd sone: I commande me unto yow with alle my herte, desyringe alle tymes to here and knowe of youre good prosperyte and welfare, whiche I praye to Almyghtye God send yow ever after youre owne hertes desire, to His plessaunce. And plesse hit yow to knowe of my welfare; the daye of this letter makyng I was in good helthe of body, blessed be oure Lorde Gode. Furthermore, I lete yow wyte that youre fader ys dede, whiche passede of this worlde at Cresmasse was xij. yere; on whos soule Almyghty Gode have mercy, for his heye Godhede! Also William Myles youre uncle, and Janet Brokhamptone, youre suster, ben dede bothe, on whos saules God have mercye! And Richard Milles youre brother, and Jonet youre suster, ben alyve and faren welle, and recomaundethe hem unto yow with alle here hole hertys. And Cristyan Artoure, youre cosyn, lyveth and farethe welle, belesede be Gode. And also I lete yow wyte that the place in Corylonde, and which scholde falle unto you by dessent after deses of youre fader forsayde, ys sesyde into the cheffe lordes handes of the fee for defaulte of claym of yow; the whiche youre friendes wolde have sewede out, yf theye hadde wyst or known that ye hadde been alyve. Wherefore and hit plesse yow to wryte youre letters of attorney unto Thomas Mucheldever and to John Wydecombe, my hoebande, dwellyng in the parische of Mertokeyn in Somersetschire, to sewe for the seyde place in Corylonde in youre name, and also a letter of youre wyll what schal be done therto, and they wollen bothe done here trewe dyligence therto with alle here hortys, with oute feynynge. And, righte worschepfulle sone, I bespeke yow of alle gentelnesse, and hit plesse yow, to sende me a letter of youre welfare, and how hit standythe with yow, the wheche I hertely desyre to knowe, as Gode wote, wheche have yow in His blessed kepyng, to his plessaunce evermore duryng. Wryten at Mertokeyn forsayde, the iij. day of Septembre. By youre moder,

"ISABELLE MILLES."

It does not appear what the tenure of the "place in Corylonde" was, or whether it had fallen into the "cheffe lordes handes," as escheated, or had merely been "sesyde" quousque for want of a tenant. One would not willingly think badly of Mrs. Widdicomb, but a suspicion will come into the mind, that the worthy lady would, twelve "yere" having already passed, never have informed Master Miles of his "fader's" death, if it had not been for the seizure by the chief lord for default of "claym of yow." If the seizure was of freeholds on account of escheat, the letter would seem to shew, that although 150 years had elapsed since the Statute of Quia Emptores, the chief lords had not yet commenced to neglect their escheats, but that then, as at the passing of the statute, the loss of escheats would be regarded "as very hard and extreme to those lords and other great men."

There is another letter, which appears to have accompanied Mrs. Widdicomb's to Master Miles, given in the same work. It is from Sir Thomas Laidamis, "parson" of St. Martin of Wareham. The Rev. Knight's letter is rather of interest to the trader than the lawyer; but as it seems to be an ancient precedent for that common-form phrase of unlearned letter-writers,—“so no more at present,”—we subjoin it here:—

"Worsypfulle and reverent frend and mayster, Y recomande me to youe wyth alle my hert, desyringe to here and to knowe of youre welfare by letter, how hyt stondyth wyth youe. Doynge youe to understand that ye and Y where scollifelaus sumtyme at Holymyster, ye beyng at borde att More ys howse, the whyche he recomande me to youe. Also, Y pray youe that ye wolde be gode mayster and frend to me for a mylstone, four Y have ypray John Penylle to by one for my mayster. Wherefore Y pray youe that ye wyll be gode mayster and frend there to. Also Y pray youe that ye wyll sende me worde, yn the most secre wyse, what yt costyth; for trwly Y wulle chentylmanly aquyte youre labour by that nex messangere that comyth by twyne youe and me. Also yff ye wulle sende eny worde to youre modyr, sendyth to me to Warham, and Y wyll trewly do youre erant. No more to youe att thys tyme, but the Wholy Trynity have youe in ys kepyng. Ywrytyn at Warham, the Monday nex byfore Sent Mathew ys day. Also Y have ysende youe to letters fro youre modyre wyth this letter. By youre owne frend,

"Sir ROBERT LAIDAMIS,
"Parson of Martyne of Warham."

It is to be hoped that, for his temporal advantage with his "mayster," the reverend gentleman obtained his millstone; and that, for the credit of the Church, he did not fail "gentlemanly" to requite Master Miles for his labour.

Helps & an. v. Clayton.

MICHAELMAS TERM.—On Tuesday, on the opening of the common-law offices, at the termination of the Long Vacation, the lists of arrears for the forthcoming Michaelmas Term, commencing on the 2nd proximo, were exhibited. In the three courts the arrears only number 83, consisting of 48 in the Queen's Bench, 20 in the Common Pleas, and 15 in the Exchequer. Formerly the new trial paper in each court presented a formidable appearance, and some 12 or 18 months elapsed before an application for a new trial was disposed of, either in argument or decision. On the present occasion, however, there are only 18 rules in the three courts pending for new trials. It appears that in the Queen's Bench there are 33 rules in the special paper, 7 enlarged rules, and 8 new trial rules. In the Common Pleas there are 2 enlarged rules, 7 for new trials, 2 postponed motions, 1 matter for decision, and 8 demurrers, already entered; while in the Exchequer there are 5 errors and appeals, 3 rules in the peremptory paper, 4 in the special paper, and 3 in the new trial list, one of which stands for judgment. The lists will probably be greatly increased before the end of the Term, by applications for new trials arising out of the summer circuits. There are several registration appeals to be heard next Term in the Court of Common Pleas. There are 124 new candidates to be admitted as attorneys, and about 20 readmissions. Last year the revenue from attorneys amounted to 88,675*l*. The judges will breakfast with the Lord Chancellor, and afterwards proceed to Westminster Hall.

BISHOP COLENZO'S CASE.—The appeal of the Bishop of Natal against the sentence of Dr. Gray, Bishop of Cape Town and Metropolitan of South Africa, deposing him from his bishopric, will come before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council immediately after the forthcoming Michaelmas Term. The case is at present somewhat complicated. The first step in the matter of the petition to the Judicial Committee was taken on Monday, the 27th June, when Mr. W. M. James, Q. C., appeared on behalf of Bishop Colenso, but further proceedings were adjourned. Bishop Colenso prays that her Majesty would be pleased to declare the petitioner to be entitled to hold his see until the letters-patent granted to him should be cancelled by due process of law for some sufficient cause of forfeiture, and to declare that the letters-patent granted to the Bishop of Cape Town, in so far as they purported to create a court of criminal justice within the colony, and to give to the Archbishop of Canterbury an appellate jurisdiction, had been unduly obtained from her Majesty, and did not affect the petitioner's rights. Bishop Colenso also prays that "the pretended trial and sentence" were void and of no effect, and that an inhibition, as was usual in ecclesiastical cases, should issue under the proceedings under the sentence, pending the appeal. Their Lordships have not at present granted the inhibition, since to grant it would be to assume the jurisdiction claimed by the Bishop of Cape Town.

NINE-TENTHS of the Total Profits are divided among the Assured. Considerably more than one-tenth of the Profits is derived from Policies which do not participate in the Profits, so that THE ASSURED HAVE LARGER BONUSES THAN IF THEY FORMED A MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY, and received the whole of the Profits derived from their own Policies.

The last BONUS averaged about SIXTY PER CENT. on the Premiums paid, and TWO PER CENT. PER ANNUM on the Sums assured.

The EXPENSES of Management are less than FIVE PER CENT. on the Income.

The PREMIUMS are calculated for every half-year of age.

The Policies of this Society, in the hands of third parties, are not vitiated by SUICIDE, or by the Life assured proceeding beyond the limits allowed.

NOTICES of ASSIGNMENT of Policies registered and acknowledged free of charge. Printed Forms for such Notices furnished when required.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 5, 1864.

THE subject of the liability of a master for an injury done to his servant by the negligence of a fellow-servant is one which has been of late years repeatedly discussed before the Courts, and may now be considered to have been thoroughly sifted and ascertained; and the degrees by which the rule of law, as now settled, has grown up and been developed, is a matter of some interest to the lawyer, and of no small importance to those who have many persons in their employ, especially to railway companies. The first case on the point is that of Priestley v. Fowler (3 M. & W. 1), where the plaintiff was sent by the defendant, his master, to take certain goods in a van, which was under the care and conduct of a fellow-servant. This fellow-servant overloaded the van, which, in consequence of the overloading, broke down and injured the plaintiff. It was admitted, on the argument, that there was no precedent for the action, and therefore that the right to maintain it must depend upon general principles. The Court held that the master was not liable, and on the following grounds:—"If the master be liable to the servant in this action, the principle of that liability will be found to carry us to an alarming extent. He who is responsible by his general duty, or by the terms of his contract, for all the consequences of negligence in a matter in which he is the principal, is responsible for the negligence of all his inferior agents. If the owner of the carriage is therefore responsible for the sufficiency of his carriage to his servant, he is responsible for the negligence of his coachmaker, or harness-maker, or coachman. Nor is there any reason why the principle should not, if applicable to this class of cases, extend to many others. The master, for example, would be liable to his servant for the negligence of the chambermaid in putting him into a damp bed; for the negligence of the cook in not properly cleaning the copper vessels used in the kitchen. The inconvenience, not to say the absurdity, of these consequences affords a sufficient argument against the application of the principle to the present case. In truth, the mere relation of the master and the servant never can imply an obligation on the part of the master to take more care of the servant than he can be reasonably expected to do of himself. He is, no doubt, bound to provide for the safety of his servant in the course of his employment, to the best of his judgment, information, and belief."

In Priestley v. Fowler the two servants were engaged in once act of service, so that the question of what is a common employment, which has been so much discussed in later cases, did not there arise. But it is suggested by Lord Abinger in his judgment, and is now fully settled, that the master is bound, at all events, to take care to engage servants who are competent to perform the duties for which he engages them; and that if he does not take such care, he is liable to a servant for injury caused by the negligence of an incompetent fellow-servant. Thus, in the judgment of the Court in the case of Hutchinson v. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Company (19 L. J., Ex., 207), it is stated, "Though we have said that a master is not responsible generally to one servant for any injury caused to him by a negligence of a fellow-servant while acting in one common service, yet this must be taken with the qualification, that the master shall have taken care not to expose his servants to any unreasonable risks. The servant, while he engages to run the risks of his service, including those arising from the negligence of fellow-servants, has a right to understand that the master has taken reasonable care to protect him from risk, by associating him only with persons of ordinary skill and care."

These two cases, therefore, decide, that if the master take due care to employ competent servants, he is not liable for injury done to one by the negligence of another, while they are engaged in a common act of service; and the ground of his non-liability is stated to be, that the servant, when he enters into the service, engages to run the risks consequent upon the nature of the employment which he undertakes; in fact, as is stated in the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in the recent case of Morgan v. The Vale of Neath Railway Company (33 L. J., Q. B., 264), "A servant who engages for the performance of service for compensation, does, as an implied part of the contract, take upon himself, as between himself and his master, the natural risks and perils incident to such service, the presumption of law being, that the compensation was adjusted accordingly; or, in other words, that those risks are considered in his wages."

It will be observed, that in the judgment in Hutchinson v. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Company, it is laid down that the master is not liable where the two servants are at the time of the accident "acting in one common service." These words, or the equivalent words "common employment," have given rise to much doubt and difference of opinion in several recent cases, especially in cases where railway companies were the defendants. The duties which the servants of these companies have to perform are so various and different in their nature, although concurrently performed, that it has been no easy matter to decide what is a common employment. Perhaps one of the best definitions of it, so far as railway companies are concerned, is given by Chief Justice Shaw in his judgment in the American case of Fardal v. The Boston and Worcester Railroad Corporation (4 Metc. 49). In this case the engineer who managed the engines and cars was held not entitled to recover against the company for the negligence of their switchman in negligently leaving a switch across the railway, whereby the engine and cars were thrown off the line. The Chief Justice remarks—"This is an action of a new impression in our Courts, and involves a principle of great importance, and presents a case where two persons are in the service and employment of one company, whose business it is to construct and maintain a railroad, and employ them upon trains of cars to carry persons and merchandise for hire. They are appointed and employed by the same company to perform separate duties and services, all tending to the accomplishment of one and the same service—that of the safe and rapid transmission of the trains; and they are paid for their respective services according to the nature of their respective duties, and the labour and skill required for their proper performance." The question is, whether, for damage sustained by one of the persons employed by means of the carelessness and negligence of another, the party injured has a remedy against the common employer." After discussing the question with great ability, the Chief Justice held that the company were not liable.

This judgment was cited with great approval, and acted upon by the Court of Exchequer in the recent case of Waller v. The South-eastern Railway Company (32 L. J., Ex., 205; 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 501). In this case a guard was travelling with a train in the course of his duty, and by reason of the defective state of the permanent way the train ran off the line and he was killed. It was the duty of the "guager" of the plate-layers to keep the line in proper repair, and he was a person of competent skill. The accident happened through his neglect, and the Court held the company not liable. The nature of the respective duties of the guard and the guager was essentially different, "but the immediate object was the successful conducting of the passengers of that particular train, one servant having to take care that the train was properly conducted, and another servant having to take care that the rails were in a fit condition, so that the journey might be properly performed." Thus, the widest possible meaning is judicially put upon the term "common employment;" so that if a master takes due care to employ servants competent to their duties, he cannot be liable for any damage done to one of them by the negligence of another in the performance of such duties, however dissimilar their respective occupations may be. The decisions which we have cited are entirely confirmed by the Court of Common Pleas in two very recent cases.—Lovegrove v. The London and Brighton Railway Company and Gallagher v. Piper (10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 879). In the latter case Byles, J., differed from the rest of the Court, on the ground, that in his opinion the master, through his foreman, knowingly put the plaintiff to work on an unsafe scaffold, and, therefore, that the case was within that class of cases in which it has been held that the master is bound to provide sufficient tackle and machinery as well as competent fellow-servants. It is the master's duty to be careful that his servant is not induced to work under a notion that tackle or machinery is staunch and secure, when, in fact, the master knows, or ought to know, that it is not so. His Lordship rests his judgment on the ground that the facts shewed "a personal" nonfeasance on the part of the employers; and in such cases it would seem that the neglect of the employers must be "personal;" otherwise there would be a frequent conflict between the principle which we have just mentioned, and that which is so clearly established by the cases, as to the meaning of the term "common employment."

Law Reporting. A Letter to Sir Roundell Palmer, Knt., M.P., her Majesty's Attorney-General, having particular Reference to the Scheme of Law Reporting recommended by the Committee appointed at the Meeting of the Bar held December 2, 1863. By W. T. S. DANIEL, Q.C. With an Appendix, containing Copies of the Report and Scheme, and other Documents. 8vo., pp. 77. [Longmans. 1864.]

MR. DANIEL, to whom, though we do not approve of the scheme which he advocates, we think the Profession is greatly indebted for the perseverance, zeal, and ability with which he has striven for an amendment of the law reports, has addressed a letter to the Attorney-General, in anticipation of the adjourned meeting of the Bar, which, according to the resolution passed in Lincoln's Inn Hall on the 1st July last, ought to be held on some day in the present month to be fixed by the Attorney-General. We can at present find room only for some extracts from Mr. Daniel's letter, which we give without comment:—

"In the Appendix C. will be found a copy of short-hand notes of the proceedings of this meeting. A perusal of these will remind you of what transpired at the meeting, and what led to its adjournment; and it was to me matter of surprise that any publications, affecting to furnish correct information to the public, should have fallen into the mistake of representing, much less of repeating with zealous perseverance, that the proceedings of the committee had proved a fiasco, and that the profession would be troubled no more with the report or scheme. Notwithstanding this weak invention of the enemy, I presume, sir, the meeting will be held; and that the question of adopting the plan as recommended, with or without modification, or rejecting it in toto, will be considered and decided; and I cannot bring myself to doubt for a moment but that the proceedings of the meeting will be conducted and concluded in a manner becoming the importance of the subject and the character of the Bar.

"My object in writing the present letter, and submitting the following observations for the consideration of my professional brethren, is, to promote and assist the full and fair discussion of the scheme recommended by the committee; being satisfied that, whatever may be the decision of the meeting thus shortly to be held, the time and labour that have been bestowed upon the matter will not have been thrown away, but that a positive good will be achieved by a knowledge of the fact, that the Bar as a body are willing, or decline, to co-operate in the redress of the existing evils, and to exert for that object such influence and authority as they, as an institution, possess." (P. 3).

"The objections which weigh with me to an official system are of a practical nature, and I will confine them to patronage and finance:—

"1. As to patronage. As an official system, accompanied by compensation to existing interests, would supersede and become the substitute for all the existing sets of reports, it would have to supply the place of what Lord St. Leonards, in his communication to the committee (and which has been recently published), calls the earlier and the later report, as to which his Lordship adds—what I believe will be very generally, if not universally, admitted—that the profession would not now be willing to lose either. The same view of what the present requirements of the profession are, was taken by the Law Times in the number of the 10th October, 1863. In a leading article, after adverting to the absurdity of half-a-dozen pens and as many presses being engaged at the same time in noting and printing the same cases, the editor sensibly observes, that 'one carefully prepared, and therefore slowly produced, authorised report, and one speedy report, the latter to be citable only until the case should be reported in the regular report, is all that the profession wants.' This earlier and later report must, therefore, I conceive, be provided for under any system that professes entirely to supersede the present. The patronage must extend to the appointment of a number sufficient to ensure the efficient and punctual preparation and publication of the double set. At present there are about 130 members of the bar engaged in reporting. Perhaps half the number would suffice under an official system. What would be the aggregate amount of salaries to be paid? Would the salary be fixed with reference to the intrinsic value of the labour and skill employed, and a chief reporter be paid after the rate of a chief registrar? or would the salary be regulated by the average rate of the salaries or profits now received by reporters?—a serious question for probable candidates. Upon either computation the annual amount would be considerable. The proposal is, that all this patronage should be vested in the holder of the Great Seal. In whom else could it be vested? And is this patronage to be exercised by the Lord Chancellor independently of, and without the concurrence of, the presiding judges of the respective courts? and are the appointments to be for life or during good behaviour, or during pleasure, or for a specified term, with or without eligibility to reappointment? What effect, I would ask, would such appointments have upon the independence of the Bar? Would not such a system have a strong and direct tendency to induce subservience to the powers that be, and impair all proper habits of self-reliance? One of the advantages of the present system is, that that the reporters are among us and of us. The instincts, habits, and feelings of the barrister are not changed or weakened by becoming a reporter. Under an official system this would necessarily be otherwise. The sympathies of a reporter with his non-reporting brethren would be loosened, if not destroyed; his esprit de corps would be no longer the same; he would become a gentlemanly official, isolated, independent—among us still, but no longer of us. In proportion as the independence of the Bar is to be valued for the sake of itself and the public, so is the prejudicial effect of a system of official appointments greatly to be feared. But apart from considerations affecting the Bar, I doubt much whether jealousy on the part of Parliament and the public would not present an insurmountable obstacle. Lord Brougham has recently borne his testimony to the fact, that jealousy of patronage has been a great obstacle in the way of the appointment of public prosecutors. (See report of a meeting of the Jurisprudence Department of the Social Science at York, on the 27th September, in the Jurist of the 8th of the present month of October). And would not the ground of jealousy of Government influence be at least as great in the case of official reporters? (P. 19).

After some further arguments against an official system, and some remarks in favour of the scheme recommended by the committee, Mr. Daniel thus assails his "authorised" opponents, who, however, are by no means so formidable or so implacable as the irregulars (p. 29):—

"But though the principle may be good and the object desirable, there is a wide and difficult interval between merit and success. The batteries of self-interest command the passage, and at this time are well manned. How often have I been told the scheme cannot succeed—the opposition of vested interests will prove too strong. Adverting to the proceedings at the meeting of the 1st July last, it is said, 'See, even the authorised reporters, whom the scheme proposes to propitiate, are opposed to it. Mr. W. M. Best, the senior reporter in the Queen's Bench, will be supposed by the public to represent the views of the authorised reporters at the common-law bar; Mr. A. E. Miller, the coadjutor of Mr. Heming, will, in like manner, be supposed to represent the views of the authorised reporters in the Court of Chancery.' I venture to doubt the accuracy of these views. I have no reason to think that Mr. Best represents the views of the common-law reporters, and I have reason to think that Mr. Miller does not represent the views of some, at least, of the Chancery reporters. But if it is to be assumed, that, to any important extent, the authorised reporters would oppose the change proposed, it will be well to see how they now stand toward the profession, viewing them as having undertaken the discharge of a public duty.

"Mr. Best moved, and Mr. Miller seconded, an amendment, proposing to strike out of the scheme all that related to the appointment of editors. Now, it will be observed that the authorised reports are the only set which have no editors; the Law Journal, the Jurist, the Law Times, the Weekly Reporter, and the New Reports have each their editors. Practically, therefore, there is no difficulty in obtaining the services of a number of able and accomplished barristers, willing to act under the control and supervision of editors; and whatever objection may be taken to the multiplicity and multifariousness of the unauthorised reports, and the quantity and quality of the matter reported, none can be taken to their cost, none to the expedition or regularity of their publication.

"Under a system of editorship, therefore, in all the existing sets of reports, other than the authorised, the profession and public, although burdened with the evils so graphically described by the contributor to the Saturday Review (ante, p. 12), have at least the solid advantage of expedition and regularity in publication, combined with moderate cost. I believe the whole five sets would not cost more than 15*l.* a year, while a complete set of the authorised reports could not be had much, if at all, under 30*l.* Now how stands the case of the authorised reports in these matters of expedition, and regularity of publication and cost? Mr. Best, in his address to the meeting, says, in effect, we don't want editors, because I and my colleague supervise each other's labours, so that each acts as editor to the reports of the other; and we are the descendants of a long and illustrious line of reporters, who have always pursued the same system. But this system of voluntary editorship does not help towards either expedition or regularity of publication. I take the last number now lying before me of Best & Smith's Queen's Bench Reports, published 14th September, 1864, part 2, vol. 4, of cases argued and determined in Trinity Vacation and Michaelmas Term, 1863. The reports of the cases argued and determined in the present year, 1864, are yet to come; for these the profession must, for an unknown period, depend upon the Law Journal or one or other of the weekly publications—so much for expedition. The same number also states, 'that these reports are in continuation of those by Ellis & Blackburn, Ellis, Blackburn, & Ellis, and Ellis & Ellis. The remaining portions of the latter are in preparation, and will be completed with as little delay as possible.' I now turn to the last number of Ellis & Ellis, thus referred to, and I find the part contains the reports of cases argued and determined in Hilary Term and Vacation, and Easter Term, 1860; and, though the date of publication is not given on the face of the part, it was published, as is well known, during the present year 1864; and, as Best & Smith's Reports commence in Easter Term, 1861, the authorised reports of decisions in the Queen's Bench, from Easter Term, 1860, to Easter Term, 1861, are yet unpublished. To the last number of Ellis & Ellis is affixed the following notice:—'In the composition of Ellis & Ellis's Reports, Mr. Francis Ellis continues to have the valuable assistance of Fredk. K. H. Cook, Esq., of the Inner Temple, barrister-at-law.' So that the reports of Ellis & Ellis, when completed, will not be the reports of the very learned reporters whose names they bear. The lamented death of Mr. Ellis, leaving two years of reports in arrear, it will be said is the unfortunate cause of this interruption in the regular publication of the series. Granted: but are not such interruptions frequent in the series of authorised reports? and are they not the almost inevitable consequence of the system upon which the authorised reports are conducted? and, to the extent to which authorised reports are of any value, are they not injurious to the profession and to the law? Such irregularities and interruptions, it is well known, are not confined to the Queen's Bench Reports; the system produces its evil fruits in the Court of Chancery. The fifth volume of Russell's Reports never has been, and I suppose now never will be, completed. We have only during this summer of 1864 had the eighth volume of De Gex, Macnaghten, & Gordon's Reports completed, bringing the reports of decisions in the Court of Appeal in Chancery down to 1857; and the third volume of De Gex, Fisher, & Jones, which ought to contain the decisions in the Court of Appeal in Chancery from the end of 1861 to Michaelmas Term, 1862, is yet incomplete; part 2, vol. 3, of these reports (bringing the decisions down to December, 1861) was published the 5th May, 1863; and the first number of the existing series of De Gex, Jones, & Smith, published November, 1863, contains this notice:—"The lamented death of Mr. Fisher, and the time required for arranging and editing his notes of the cases reported by him, have prevented the immediate completion of the series of De Gex, Fisher, & Jones's Reports." From this note it would seem that the authorised reporters in Chancery have something of the same notion of editing their colleague's labours as Mr. Best.

"These matters are not brought forward from any desire to make invidious charges against anybody. They are exhibited as the natural fruits of the system upon which the authorised reports are at present conducted, and appear to me to have a very close and direct bearing upon the amendment of Mr. Best and Mr. Miller. Exclusive of the Nisi Prius Reports, there are, as stated in my former letter, sixteen different sets of authorised reports, and each of these sixteen sets is prepared and published according to the convenience, views, and interests of the sixteen different sets of gentlemen whose names they bear, and their respective publishers. There is no community of design, arrangement, management, or interest among them."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 12, 1864.

THE three Stamp Acts which have been passed during the last session of Parliament (27 & 28 Vict. c. 18, 56, and 90), cannot be regarded as a very serious addition to the complexity of the stamp laws. But that complexity, the inconvenient and oppressive operation of the stamp laws, the uncertainty of their interpretation, and the rapacity and incompetence of the officers appointed to administer them, constitute a grievance, which we trust will not be endured much longer. A case reported in the last number of the Weekly Reporter may be referred to, in illustration of the absurdity of these laws. The general Stamp Act (55 Geo. 3, c. 180) imposed an ad valorem stamp duty on conveyances of property where the consideration for the conveyance was money, but left conveyances in consideration of stock untaxed. By the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, conveyances in consideration "of any stock in any of the public funds, or any Government debenture, or stock of the Bank of England or Bank of Ireland, or any debenture or stock of any corporation, company, society, or persons or person, payable only at the will of the debtor," were subjected to an ad valorem duty on the market value of the stock or debenture constituting the consideration; and it was directed, "that the purchase money or consideration should be truly expressed and set forth in words at length, in or upon the principal or only deed or instrument of conveyance; and when such consideration shall consist either wholly or in part of any stock or security, the value thereof respectively to be ascertained as herein mentioned shall also be truly expressed and set forth in manner aforesaid in or upon every such deed or instrument, and such value shall be deemed and taken to be the purchase or consideration money, or part of the purchase or consideration money, as the case may be, in respect whereof the ad valorem duty shall be charged as aforesaid." In The Furness Railway Company v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue (13 Weekly Rep. 10), the question arose upon a conveyance by the Ulverstone Railway Company of their works and undertaking to the Furness Railway Company, in consideration of 298,000*l.* preferential 6*l.* per cent. stock of the latter company, to be allotted to the shareholders of the Ulverstone Company, as fully paid-up stock, with a perpetual preferential dividend of 6*l.* per cent. per annum. From this statement it would appear that the 6*l.* per cent. to be paid upon the preferential stock was a dividend to be made to that amount out of profits, if any accrued, and that it did not constitute in any sense a debt from the Furness Company, to be paid out of their general assets. The shareholders in the Ulverstone Company were admitted as partners in the Furness Company, with a preference, within certain limits, in the division of profits. If the arrangement was different from this, the difference does not appear to have been considered material, and it was not in any way adverted to. The deed stated the amount of stock, but did not set forth the market value of it. It was held by the Court of Exchequer, that it required an ad valorem conveyance stamp on the market value of the stock. Pollock, C. B., in giving judgment, said, "We think it is clear that part of the consideration for the sale was stock. It was argued that it was not stock within the meaning of the second passage in the schedule, tit. 'Conveyance,' because stock of some third company was meant by that. We think there are no grounds for so contending. If the Furness Company had occasion to buy land, and promised to pay the price by bills, we think such an agreement would be within the statute." The omission to state the market value was considered unimportant.

We do not understand the objection to which the Chief Baron refers, that the stock could not be within the act, because it was stock of the purchasers themselves, and not of some third person. We take it to be clear, that if a conveyance is made to the Bank of England, in consideration of Bank stock, the ad valorem duty attaches. But the real question in the case—whether the stock was that kind of stock which the act mentions, does not appear to have been suggested. The act makes no mention of shares, and if instead of paid-up stock the consideration had been paid-up shares in the Furness Railway Company, it is not easy to see how the deed could have been brought within the charge. The clause in question mentions only stock and debentures:—"Stock in any of the public funds," "Government debentures," "Stock in the Bank of England or Bank of Ireland," "Debentures or stock of any corporation, company, society, or persons or person payable only at the will of the debtor." Within some one of these denominations the consideration, if not actually money or an ordinary debt, must be brought. Now, stock in the funds is a debt bearing interest, the principal payable only at the will of the debtor. Debentures are securities for debts, and, if not payable only at the will of the debtor, come within the description of a money consideration. Stock of the Bank of England or Bank of Ireland is a portion of the capital of an incorporated partnership, giving a title to a dividend of profits. But stock of any corporation, persons, or person, &c., payable only at the will of the debtor, is something involving a debt—something analogous to stock in the public funds—a debt bearing interest until it is paid off, and not to be paid off until the debtor thinks fit. For capital in a partnership there is no debtor, nor any person having an option to make or withhold payment; and if it was the intention to include such capital, the words "share or capital stock" would have been used, and the words on which we have commented would have been omitted. That the framer of the act, unskilful as he was, knew how to describe partnership stock, is shewn by the language of the title "settlement" in the same schedule, which imposes an ad valorem duty on a settlement of "any definite and certain share or shares in any of the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, or in the stocks and funds of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or of the Bank of Ireland, or of any other company or corporation." We submit, therefore, that until the question has been fairly raised and decided, a conveyance in consideration of shares or consolidated stock of a company (other than the Banks of England and Ireland) is not liable to ad valorem duty. But why should it not be? or rather why should such a conveyance, or any other conveyance, be subjected to any such impost? Why is an exchange of land for money to be charged, and an exchange of land for land or goods to be exempt? Why should a capitalist who brings half a million into a trading concern pay no more than 35s. on the deed which records his admission, while a mortgagee, creditor, say, of an insolvent colliery, on which he has advanced 50,000*l.*, and which is not worth 500*l.*, is unable to purchase the miserable equity of redemption without paying 250*l.* in stamps to the Government? No defence can be offered for these anomalies, or for the shameful obscurity and complexity of the statutes which have created them—only let us hope that if any attempt is made to consolidate and amend the Stamp Acts, the advice and assistance of the very incompetent men who have brought them into their present condition will be rejected.

Petheram on Interrogatories.—[Maxwell.]

THIS is a useful little book, on a subject which is constantly being discussed before the Courts or at the judge's chambers. Few practitioners will deny that the power of administering interrogatories created by the Common-law Procedure Act is constantly abused, and that orders allowing them are frequently made by the judges, simply because they have not time to examine them in detail. The result is, that the party interrogated must either answer the questions or incur the risk of unfavourable remark if he refuses to answer. This is an evil which is sometimes remedied by the judge referring the interrogatories to the Master, in order that he may reduce them at his discretion. And it may be that the evil will be further diminished when the rules by which the allowance of questions should be regulated are more clearly and generally understood. Mr. Petheram's book collects the principal cases on the subject, and extracts from them these general rules. He arrives at the conclusion, that the discovery which the Legislature intended to allow is analogous to the discovery allowed in equity. And he shews how the decision in Bartlett v. Lewis (31 L. J., C. P., 230) may be reconciled with this rule. Prima facie, this case appears to be at variance with the previous cases, in which the rule for that which Mr. Petheram contends has been laid down; and although his comments upon it may be correct, still we think that other minds might reasonably take a different view of the extent and meaning of this decision, and consider, that in consequence of it the limitation of the power of administering interrogatories is still undefined. This, however, is no fault of Mr. Petheram's book, in which the cases and judicial expressions of opinion upon this branch of the law are carefully collected.

LAW REPORTING.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Mr. Daniel, who may be fairly called the originator of the most recent movement in the direction of a reform in the present mode of reporting judicial decision, has, at the close of the vacation, and with such an amount of freshness and vigour of handling as will astonish the majority of persons who may have thought the subject almost exhausted, addressed a further letter to the Attorney-General, in connexion with the scheme lately recommended by two-thirds of the committee on law reporting. Writing, as I do, to yourself, sir, an editor of a series which is termed "irregular," I might erroneously infer that any attack upon the regular reports would be likely to enlist your sympathy; and that any plan, however ill-considered, for replacing them by a new, untried, speculative series, would be hailed by yourself, and those in a similar position, as a plan which could only result to your profit; but, knowing you, as I do, sir, through your excellent weekly lucubrations, I deem you quite incapable of entertaining such an idea. I am happy, moreover, to see that Mr. Daniel himself is more careful in his expressions with reference to the regular reporters, than he was in his former letter, for which former expressions, however, I believe, he subsequently expressed his regret. Still, he calmly contemplates their non-adhesion to the scheme proposed, and writes (p. 35):—"The council might be able to get on without them; and, although it would be matter of regret that reports calling themselves authorised should still continue to be published, it is obvious that a small proportion of that professional support which would be necessary to launch the scheme would, if withdrawn from the authorised reports, cause their annihilation." This sentence, at all events, shews candour, and is addressed, I must say, not so much to the learned Attorney-General as to the regular reporters, and, in effect, says:—"Fall in with our scheme, or you will be hopelessly ruined." As to yourself, sir, the scheme allows you to get on as well as you can, until it compensate or dispossess you. At the outset of his letter (p. 2) Mr. Daniel deprecates the spirit of dogmatism or self-interest, and I think most persons will acquit him of being influenced by the latter, but, as to the former, any man who is the originator of a scheme, and who confesses (p. 4) to having chiefly named the members of the committee, may be open to the charge of, or, at all events, is likely to relapse into, a dogmatic spirit. He is naturally wounded, therefore, by some passage in one of the public prints (could it have been the Times), to the effect, that the proceedings of the committee had failed—an operation which he styles as "a weak invention of the enemy" (p. 3). He defends the number and character of the committee so constituted as fairly representing the Bar; and, perhaps, the only objection, of which I was not until now aware, is, that Mr. Daniel chiefly named them; certainly to his remarks (p. 5) with respect to their high position, singleness of purpose, and public spirit, there can be no exception. I do not think, however, that the word "poison" (p. 6) is fairly attributable, either directly or indirectly, to the remarks of the contributor to the Saturday Review, who feared that the scheme might degenerate into a mere speculation for the benefit of the lawyers, as I imagine that all the reports, as at present constituted, are speculations for the benefit of the lawyers. We are next informed (p. 6) that seventy-four communications were received from members of the profession; others also from four societies of attorneys and solicitors; that application was likewise made to publishers and proprietors of existing reports, who appear to have been naturally somewhat slow to reveal the peculiar mysteries of their existence. We are glad, however, to learn (p. 6) that "the committee were, nevertheless, in possession of sufficient data to enable them to discharge their duty." The result, as it appeared to the committee, of all these communications was, a division of the Bar into three classes:—First, those who were satisfied with existing things; secondly, those who wanted the interference of the Legislature, on the principle of compensation to existing interests; thirdly, those who wanted the assistance of a council of the Bar. Then there were some of the first class who were disposed to be of the second, if compensation were certain; and some of the second who were in favour of a registered record, at once exclusive and conclusive (p. 7). Mr. Denman appears to have been "the forlorn hope" of the simply satisfied, as we are told (p. 8), "no other member of the committee expressed concurrence in those views." But Mr. Daniel is not content with having demolished his opponent in committee, he feels he must handle the party Mr. Denman represents; he therefore refers to their arguments founded on the principle of free trade, and on the alleged fact, that the present system was substituted for one of monopoly connected with undue judicial influence. According to Mr. Denman, everything of value must now be reported; the Court must listen to any report accredited by a barrister; and those who are in full practice can afford to pay for all the reports. But Mr. Daniel inquires (pp. 10 and 11) whether reporting be a proper subject for free trade, and urges, with considerable force, that the proceedings of courts of justice are not in the nature of raw material, and that, at all events, "the evils of the old monopoly are not redressed. The authorised reports still live on, still dilatory, irregular, and as costly as ever" (p. 12). We have next the testimony of the Saturday Review and Mr. G. W. Heming to the necessity of a reform; and a passage is extracted from the able address of Sir James Wilde at the last meeting of the Social Science Association at York, attributing the frequent inconsistencies of decision to the present confused agglomeration of precedent; and Mr. Hallam is referred to, who says, "We accumulate precedent upon precedent, till no understanding can acquire, nor any intellect digest, the mass of learning that grows upon the panting student." (2 Mid. Ages, 123). Mr. Daniel then states, that private interests are sure to predominate over all considerations of public benefit, and inquires, "Why is quantity, not quality, the test?" His answer to this and similar questions is, "the hope of profit" (pp. 15 and 16). Mr. Daniel, after alluding to the form of amendment by external authority proposed by Mr. Joshua Williams and others, says, "The choice of remedies will, I venture to think, be found to lie between a strictly official system, as proposed by Mr. Montague Smith, and a system based upon professional regulation and control, as recommended by the committee." His objections to an official system are prefaced by a statement, that the attempt in the reign of James I to revive the ancient office of reporter was a failure. He, however, admits that the times are somewhat altered, and most persons will, perhaps, be disposed to think it possible, that a plant of progress, which withered in the constitutional and political atmosphere of the age to which he refers, might nevertheless flourish under the more benign rule of our present Sovereign. Mr. Daniel then alludes to the American system, and Mr. Wallace's testimony, to the effect, that some suggestions for good may possibly be taken by England from that system—"not, however, many;" and then proceeds to state his own objections to the official system, viz. on the ground of patronage and finance (p. 19). But does it not seem incredible, sir, that any man should deem that patronage, exercised by a council of the Bar, would be more acceptable to the profession, or be likely to be more disinterestedly bestowed, than if exercised by the Crown. "The earlier and later report must be provided for," says Mr. Daniel, "under any system that professes entirely to supersede the present." Mark this, and couple it with the provisions of the 7th and 8th sections of the scheme for the appearance of the reports monthly, and the institution, if desirable, of a weekly set of reports in connexion with the others; and will anybody doubt that Mr. Daniel's project is a half candid, half insinuating, scheme for thrusting out all the present reporters, regular and irregular? There is, however, a vulnerable part of Mr. Daniel's armour; the 11th section of the scheme provides for the appointment and removal of the reporters by the council, and for the appointment, at all events, being subject to the approval of the judge. What if the judge should not approve the choice of the council, or the council remove a reporter who satisfies the judge? What an undignified conflict might ensue between the Bench and the Bar! Mr. Daniel then admits that half the present number of reporters might suffice under an official system; and asks, "Would the salary be fixed with reference to the intrinsic value of the labour and skill employed?" (p. 20). I should answer that question most emphatically in the affirmative, and as to patronage, it would be, of course, vested in the Crown; and surely, it is idle to talk of the sympathies of reporters with their brethren being likely to be affected by holding such appointments; on the contrary, the reporter would be much more respected than if he continued, as at present, to be in everybody's way, and to be elbowed about by everybody. The judges, by their appointment, lose nothing of their sympathy with the Bar, and every word that Mr. Daniel writes about jealousy of Government influence, would apply, with much greater force, to the appointment of the judges themselves. Mr. Daniel, supposing these objections surmounted, asks (p. 22), with respect to compensation, "Ought the money of the public to be applied to such a purpose?" and quotes from Mr. Brickdale, who considers the present reporters and publishers have no legal or moral claim to compensation. I confess my idea to be, that the irregular reports ought to be compensated for suppression as citable authorities, and the regular reports transformed into official, to be, as King James I quaintly hath it, prepared "compendiously, yet truly and narratively" (p. 76). But Mr. Daniel answers his own question, for he states that, under a proper system, the reports would not only be self-supporting, but "leave an available surplus" (p. 24). I may remark here, that there are many barristers who are only such in name, and to whom the reports are of no manner of importance; it would be well, under any new system, to compel a general contribution for the purpose of relieving those who practise. Mr. Daniel is of opinion that these money matters had better be left to those directly interested, and dislikes a Government board or council in this connexion; and concludes by stating that the official scheme must split upon either of the two rocks, patronage or finance. The writer then considers (p. 26) the scheme signed by fifteen out of twenty-two members of the committee: it is a curious fact, that the number of dissentients exactly corresponds with the number of the quorum fixed at the meeting, for we read, "and that of these (the committee) seven be a quorum." Let us not, therefore, despise the number, especially as the names are somewhat imposing. But does or does not Mr. Daniel break down when he says (p. 27), "My view of the principle of the scheme is this—it recognises the privilege of reporting for citation, as authority, as a privilege of the Bar, vested in it for the public benefit." To speak plainly and unmistakably, Mr. Daniel's scheme does not recognise any such principle; for it reserves the so-called indefinite privilege of every individual member, to the prejudice of the whole body of the Bar and the public.

Mr. Daniel says, further, that there is no novelty in his design, and refers to the Council of Education, and the Council of the Law Institution. To which of these, may I ask, would he intrust the onerous duties of the reporter? In pp. 28 and 29 the reader will find the co-operative principle enunciated, the ridicule of which, in the absence of capital, by a contributor to the Saturday Review, appears to have left a sting in Mr. Daniel's breast (p. 35). In p. 29 it is represented that the scheme "does not propose to establish a monopoly by authority," and that "exclusive citation will be the result of professional choice;" but it is subsequently admitted (p. 29), that "the batteries of self-interest command the passage, and at this time are well manned." Why this should be so, unless there were something more in the scheme than appears at first sight, I am at a loss to understand. Mr. Daniel then considers Mr. Best's amendment to the resolution for adopting the scheme; and, I must confess, I cannot support the amendment, because I am not prepared to support the scheme at all. It would be a great mistake to carry the amendment—a still greater to carry the resolution. Mr. Daniel then gives instances of delay in the publishing of the regular reports, as the natural fruits of a system without editorship, and hence argues against Mr. Best's amendment; and idly threatens the regular reporters (p. 35), if they stand out, with the alternative of ruin. Finally, the writer expresses his surprise, that the parties now interested in the reports have not agreed upon one standard set, "as their interests might be prejudiced by an entire change of system;" and adds, "But why should not the folly of individuals help to the public good?" (p. 37).

This is extraordinary argument, as addressed, at least, to members of the Bar! It seems as if Mr. Daniel said, "I can shew even now, if I choose, how you can all save yourselves from the consequences of my scheme, or any other." Is it so? Is there still, then, a locus penitentiae for the reporters, regular and irregular? Can they, by timely concert, avert the storm which, summoned by the wand of the legal Prospero, now darkens the air?

I have but a few more words to add. In Appendix (F.) to Mr. Daniel's letter will be found the quaint old document authorising official reporters, addressed by King James I to Sir Francis Bacon and Sir Julius Cesar, which will certainly repay the trouble of perusal, and in which not even "the convenient place for the taking and writing of the same" is omitted to be provided for.

Your obedient servant,

Rolls-chambers, Chancery-lane,

APPEALS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—It seems probable that the Home Secretary will be pressed, on behalf of the convict now under sentence of death, with some proof, or attempt at proof, that his clothes, on the morning after the murder, shewed no traces of blood. If such evidence had been offered at the trial, the advisers of the Crown could easily have shewn that the absence of marks or traces of recent washing on woollen cloth affords no proof that it has not been recently stained with blood. It is familiar knowledge to every surgeon, and probably to many tailors, that blood dried upon even light-coloured woollen cloth, can be removed by brushing, without leaving any mark. But on an parte application such evidence would not be forthcoming.

As fifteen years have elapsed since I addressed to you some observations on a proposal, which you then regarded with favour, for allowing compensation from the State to persons wrongfully convicted, and as those observations are pertinent to the question of the expediency of new trials in criminal cases, I will now ask your permission to submit them to a new generation of readers. They ran as follows:—

"Though I cannot unreservedly agree with Lord Coke, that 'the common law is nothing but reason,' yet I think with him, that some of its most 'amiable and admirable secrets' are to be reached only by deep diving; and I fear you have rather hastily concluded, from an incomplete exploration of its depths, that our old constitutional maxim, that the Crown can do no wrong (not confined to the criminal law, but extending to every branch of the executive), ought to be altered in the manner you have proposed. I say that I fear this, because the suggestion recommends itself at once to our common notions of justice and humanity. The existing rule is intended to discourage negligence, and to shut out fraud, which would otherwise occasion mischief far more serious than the accidental and very rarely occurring destruction of a man's character and life or happiness by the defective working of the social machinery, lamentable and lamented as such accidents must ever be. I am not sure even that the alterations you suggest would not increase the amount of unredressed hardships of the kind to which you refer. At present, where a man is tried once for all, every exertion is made that the importance and finality of the occasion demand. No hesitating juror, no careless counsel, can comfort himself with the reflection that the prisoner, if innocent, may appeal (for your proposal cannot be carried into effect without giving the right of appeal); no witness can hold back in the belief that his testimony, if it be important, may be brought forward at a new trial. Under the proposed system we may expect to hear from the criminal bench, or in the jury box, expressions like those which too often proceed from the lips of a Vice-Chancellor:—'I make the decree with hesitation, but I have the satisfaction of knowing that, if I am wrong, I shall be set right in another place.' How often will a carelessly-convicted person, penniless, in bonds, removed from the scene of action, be able to procure friends or funds for a successful appeal?

"Look, now, at the effect of such a change on the protection from crime and fraud of the innocent public—a much larger and more important class of innocents than that which finds its way to the docks, though too often overlooked by the professed advocates of humanity. Prosecutors and witnesses in posse are not easily induced to face the annoyance of a single trial. Will the prospect of a second encourage them? Moreover, by what statute of frauds and perjuries will you protect the revenue from the gainful trade of fraudulent prosecutions which will spring up when the Crown is made liable in damages? A voyage to Australia at the public expense, and an honourable acquittal, with 100*l.* damages on arriving there, would be a rational object of ambition to many an enterprising scoundrel.

"These, sir, are some of the grounds upon which I think it probable that the severe but salutary rule in question was founded. Let us endeavour to prevent as far as possible the recurrence of those deplorable cases in which its hardship is felt, by improving the administration of the law, but let us not lose sight of prudence in striving after an unattainable perfection of humanity."

DRACO.

THE BAR DINNER TO M. BERRYER.

At the dinner given by the English Bar to M. Berryer, in the Middle Temple, on the 8th November, more than 400 persons—guests and hosts—were present. The Attorney-General took the chair, and at the chief table on his right and left were M. Berryer, M. Desmarest (the bâtonnier of the French Bar), Lord Brougham, Lord Kingsdown, Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Justice Knight Bruce, Vice-Chancellor Wood, Vice-Chancellor Stuart, Mr. Baron Martin, Mr. Baron Pigott, Mr. Baron Bramwell, Mr. Justice Blackburn, Mr. Justice Byles, Mr. Justice Mellor, the Solicitor-General, Mr. S. H. Walpole, Q. C., M. P., Mr. Rolt, Q. C., M. P., Sir F. Kelly, M. P., Sir E. Ryan, Sir E. Wilmot, Sir W. Alexander, Q. C., Mr. Ingham, M. P., Mr. Roebuck, M. P., Mr. M. Smith, Q. C., M. P., Mr. W. Ewart, M. P., Sir H. Cairns, M. P., Mr. Stuart Wortley, Q. C., the Recorder of London, the Common Serjeant, Mr. Warren, Q. C., Dr. Twiss, Dr. Deane, Mr. Peacocke, M. P., Mr. J. Locke, M. P., Mr. G. Denman, M. P., Mr. J. J. Powell, M. P., Mr. Phinn, Q. C., the Judge-Advocate General, Mr. P. Erle, Q. C., Mr. Serjeant Parry, and Mr. Serjeant Ballantine.

The health of M. Berryer was proposed by the Attorney-General, and in reply

M. BERRYER said—Vous me croirez quand je vous dirai que je suis profondément ému à l'aspect de cette imposante et presque fraternelle réception. Je me vois accueilli au milieu de la grande et libre Angleterre; vous ne vous étonnerez pas qu'il y ait de trouble dans ma manière d'exprimer mes remerciements. Hier, Monsieur l'Attorney-Général, je vous félicitais et je félicitais ce grand et noble pays de voir l'Attorney-Général (spectacle rare pour nous) déployer un zèle aussi éclairé que sage pour seconder les associations qui ont pour objet de perfectionner la loi. Aujourd'hui, comme avocat, je me sens ému de vous voir parler, comme chef du barreau, au nom des avocats. Grand et beau spectacle, qui me rappelle que telle était la coutume de mon pays quand les Procureurs-Généraux et les Avocats-Généraux s'appelaient eux-mêmes les généraux des avocats. En me parlant au nom du barreau Anglais, vous daignez me complimenter sur les travaux de ma vie. J'avoue que je me sens humilié de ces compliments quand je me rappelle ce que furent les avocats Anglais, ceux qui m'ont honoré de leur amitié; ce que fut Lord Lyndhurst, que nous pleurons tous, et cet autre grand homme qui a voulu m'initier à toutes les grandes choses de ce pays—ce noble propagateur de tous les progrès, de toutes les institutions libérales même dans cette libre Angleterre, ce grand homme que je salue, Lord Brougham! Après 50 ans de travaux j'ai reçu de mes confrères de France un témoignage de fraternelle sympathie. Mais là j'étais au milieu de miens. J'étais soutenu par cinquante années de relations amicales. Encore une fois, j'étais auprès des miens; mais près de vous je ne saurais dire ce que je sens. Si, laissez-moi dire ce que j'éprouve en ce moment; il me semble que c'est la voix de la postérité que j'entends tomber de vos lèvres. Il y a une pensée plus féconde pour l'avenir qu'un hommage rendu à un seul homme. Il y a l'alliance des barreaux des deux nations les plus civilisées du monde. J'ai assisté à toutes les cours de justice de votre pays, à toutes les délibérations judiciaires, j'ai été frappé de la situation qui est y faite au barreau. Rien ne pouvait plus me toucher que ces entretiens familiers entre le juge et l'avocat. Cela prouve à ce dernier l'attention qui lui est accordée, et j'y vois une garantie pour le sentiment d'indépendance qui doit appartenir à cette noble profession. Je fais des vœux ardents pour que l'alliance des deux barreaux vienne à se cimenter. Nous ne pouvons en France avoir de ces réunions que la loi autorise dans ce pays; mais nous pouvons nous mettre en communication les uns avec les autres, et de ces communications naîtra, je l'espère, l'union des intelligences. Le barreau Français n'a pas, comme le barreau Anglais, fourni des hommes à toutes les situations de la vie politique. Au milieu de nos révolutions, les hommes qui se respectent n'ont pas voulu accepter d'emplois. Le barreau est resté l'asile de ceux qui, froissés dans leurs convictions, n'ont pas voulu fléchir. On compte parmi eux les hommes les plus éminents. Nous possédons le libre échange; mais il ne faut pas qu'il se borne à l'échange de soieries et des cotonnades; il faut que ce soit le libre échange des idées. Vous pourrez trouver chez nous beaucoup de choses bonnes à prendre. Nous rencontrons chez vous des écrivains instruits, éclairés; une presse puissante, que nous ne connaissons pas. Je vote pour l'alliance des deux barreaux, et je prie mon collègue de seconder mon vote.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL next proposed the health of M. Desmarest and the Bar of France.

In returning thanks,

M. DESMAREST said—Je suis ému quand je me lève pour répondre au toast si bon et si affectueux porté au barreau de France. L'union entre les deux barreaux a été le rêve de mon intelligence. Quand on considère les choses du monde (même après un banquet aussi splendide) il est impossible de méconnaître qu'il y a au monde deux influences, la force et la justice. Je ne veux pas dire de mal de la force; quant à la justice, c'est ici qu'il sied d'en dire du bien, devant votre gloire présente et devant votre gloire ancienne; permettez-moi d'ajouter en présence de ces deux porte-étendards du droit et de la justice, Lord Brougham et M. Berryer. Il existe une grande similitude dans leurs caractères. Tous deux ils ont porté bien haut la gloire intellectuelle; tous deux ils ont brillé dans les assemblées publiques; tous deux, enfin, sont membres de l'Académie Française. J'avoue que je serais troublé si je n'avais à apporter ici que le tribut de ma seule reconnaissance. Mais aussitôt que j'ai été informé de votre gracieuse invitation, j'ai profité de ces réunions légales autorisées en France pour dire à nos avocats l'honneur qui m'était fait. Tous, jeunes et vieux, m'ont répondu, "Allez en Angleterre." Je n'ai pas eu le temps de consulter les membres de notre barreau de province, mais tous m'auraient tenu le même langage—tous. Je vois la grande image du monde judiciaire de France donnant la main au monde judiciaire d'Angleterre, degré préliminaire pour amener entre nous une alliance plus intime, selon la belle idée de celui qui devrait être notre bâtonnier perpétuel, et qui est toujours notre bâtonnier moral. Messieurs, permettez-moi de dire mes cher confrères, vous nous avez donné l'exemple, soyez certain qu'il sera suivi. Un de vos hommes d'état, l'illustre Chancelier de l'Echiquier, disait dans une circonstance récente avec cette incomparable éloquence qui rappelle les beaux jours de l'antiquité, que, dans le temps où nous vivons, le progrès de la civilisation devait s'accomplir par des moyens plus doux que dans les temps passés. Ces paroles, qui concilient bien des difficultés, ont trouvé de l'écho en France. Je signe avec vous un traité d'alliance qui servira à la conquête pacifique du progrès.

M. RODOT also returned thanks on behalf of the junior Bar of France.

In acknowledging "The Judges of England,"

Lord Chief Justice COCKBURN said—I am sure I express the sentiments of all my brother judges when I say that we feel the highest gratification at this opportunity of expressing our admiration and respect for the bar of France, and for the illustrious guests who so worthily represent it among us. We, who have to be students of jurisprudence, with a view to its administration, know how much that noble science is indebted to the illustrious jurists of France, whose labours have shed such light and lustre on that science. We, too, who have watched the celebrated trials which have occupied the tribunals of that country, have marked with admiration the brilliant eloquence, the vast attainments, the great reasoning powers, the knowledge and learning, the energy and independence of the bar of that great country. We rejoice to have the opportunity of paying the tribute of our respect to the French bar, and we rejoice that that opportunity has been afforded us in the person of its most distinguished member, as well of its official representative. Much as I admire the great abilities of M. Berryer, to my mind his crowning virtue—as it ought to be that of every advocate—is, that he has throughout his career conducted his cases with untarnished honour. The arms which an advocate wields he ought to use as a warrior, not as an assassin. He ought to uphold the interests of his clients per fas, but not per nefas°. He ought to know how to reconcile the interests of his client with the eternal interests of truth and justice. In all the great interests which he has upheld, M. Berryer has never forgotten the honour of the advocate, and for this I respect him as much as for the eminent talents which have cast so much lustre on his name and profession.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, in returning thanks for the House of Commons, said—My honourable and learned friend has spoken of the title by which I have the privilege of addressing this great assemblage; but I will venture to ask one favour of you, and that is, that you will not exercise your legal ingenuity in endeavouring to discover any flaws in it. But be it as a judge or as a layman, I rejoice to be permitted to join you in the tribute of respect and admiration to the guests whom you entertain to-day. Rare are the occasions when it is in the power of an individual member of the House of Commons to make himself the organ of its sentiments; but I am well assured that this is one of those few occasions on which if the House of Commons had it in its power to speak by a single voice, it would express its profound sympathy with the enthusiasm which pervades this assembly. So profound and lively is the sympathy which runs through all our political institutions, and so closely and inseparably is the House of Commons associated with all our utterances, our feelings, and political habits, that if it were torn away from the constitution of England (were such a thing possible), England would cease to be what she is. Those who in this country pursue the business of legislation, and those who are charged with the special business of government, the longer they live and the wider their experience grows, become more deeply convinced of the inestimable value and the indispensable necessity of a free and fearless bar, in order to secure the liberties of the country. We have been told to-night, in eloquent terms, what have been the recent achievements of your illustrious profession on behalf of liberty; and if we go back to the dark times of our history—to the reign of James II, and the trial of the seven bishops, for instance—we find that whenever there has been a question of examining into, searching out, and vindicating the liberties of England, the bar of England has always stood in the foremost rank. I have always felt that the bar is inseparable from our national life—from the security of our national institutions; but never, so long as I looked at England alone, did I understand the full extent of its value. Some years ago it was my lot to be witness of cruel oppression in a country in the south of Europe. There the executive power did not merely break the law, but deliberately supplanted it, and set it aside, and established in its stead a system of pure arbitrary will. To my astonishment I found that the audacity of tyranny, which had put down chambers and municipalities, and which had extinguished the press, had not been able to do one thing—to silence the bar. I heard in the courts of justice, under the bayonets of soldiers, for they bristled with bayonets, in the teeth of power, in contempt of corruption, and in defiance of violence and arbitrary rule, lawyers rising in their places and defending the cause of the accused with a freedom and fearlessness which could not have been surpassed in free England, or even by M. Berryer himself. We are not here to discuss the merits of particular schools of public opinion, but we are here for more purposes than one; and one of our purposes, I believe, is to add another to the many testimonies which recent history has afforded of the growth of a cordial and hearty sentiment between the two great nations of France and England. As there are ties which bind together different classes of the same country, so there are electric currents which pass over the boundaries of political divisions and establish sympathies that run throughout the world. Those sympathies animate the hearts of our illustrious guests, and throb with equal power in the breast of every member of this great assemblage. I may be permitted to look on you from without, but at the same time to express my sincere concurrence in the tribute of admiration which has been rendered to M. Berryer personally and to the great achievements of his life—a life which, great as it is by its achievements, is yet greater by its devotion to the indestructible principles which are involved in the constitution of a free and independent bar, bound by the highest obligation to speak with the voice of truth under all circumstances. M. Desmarest has spoken of the moral force which he hopes to see pre-eminent; and I believe with him, that, by the wise counsels of Providence, we may hope to see arising, and day by day slowly but surely progressing and enlarging the dominion of that moral force, by the influence of which the brute and barbarous violence of old will gradually come to have less and less effectual action on the conduct of mankind.

The remaining toasts were "The Committee," for which Sir F. Kelly returned thanks; and "The Health of the Chairman," proposed by Lord Justice Knight Bruce, after which the company separated at a late hour.

COPY OF LETTER TO THE LORD CHANCELLOR ON THE SUBJECT OF PROFESSIONAL REMUNERATION, AND HIS REPLY.

To the Right Hon. Richard Baron Westbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

Liverpool, October, 1864.

My Lord,—We, the committee of the Liverpool Law Society, have noticed with satisfaction that your Lordship has brought before Parliament the subject of the remuneration of attorneys and solicitors, by a bill introduced by your Lordship into the House of Lords in the last session of Parliament. Anticipating that your Lordship will probably in the ensuing session follow up the step you then took, by introducing the same or some other measure with the same object, we take the liberty of addressing the following remarks to your Lordship in support of the objects sought to be attained by the said bill.

* See, however, Lord Brougham's famous assertion of the duty of counsel, in his defence of Queen Caroline.

It is scarcely necessary for us to point out that the subject of the remuneration of attorneys and solicitors is not a mere selfish question, in which those of our own profession are exclusively interested, but that so long as solicitors have such important functions to discharge, and such grave responsibilities as at present devolve upon them, it is a matter of the most serious importance to society at large that the class of men who fill that office should be educated and high-minded gentlemen, and that, however rigidly admission to the profession may be regulated, all such regulations will be insufficient to secure a suitable class of candidates, unless the profession offers, upon the whole, a remuneration not less upon the average than is offered by the other callings which are open to the educated middle classes. The public must ultimately suffer by any regulation which, whether by limiting the remuneration, or in any other way, has a tendency to cause the attorneys of England to be recruited from a lower class of society.

The best proof that the remuneration of attorneys and solicitors is not at present sufficient to secure a permanent supply of candidates from the educated classes, is the consideration of the changes which have taken place in the amount of that remuneration.

In a relation so intimate and so confidential, and, therefore, so liable to abuse as that of attorney and client, the law properly intervenes to regulate the remuneration which the attorney shall be entitled to require for his time and labour; and the remuneration of the attorney for a fixed work is, therefore, a fixed sum, but the relation of such fixed remuneration to the work which it represents has become much altered since it was first fixed; because the measure of the value of an attorney's labour has been stationary for many centuries, whilst the value of all other commodities has been steadily advancing. This is proved by the retention in an attorney's bill, and in that only of the sum of 6s. 8d., the value of the extinct coin called a noble, which has not been in common use for at least two centuries. We should, however, prefer to rest our proof of the present inadequacy of the remuneration of attorneys, mainly upon the changes which have taken place within the memory of the present generation. If it may be assumed that the remuneration of attorneys fifty years ago was not excessive, but merely sufficient to secure an adequate supply of educated practitioners, it may be easily shewn that the present scale of remuneration must be grossly inadequate. For within that period many changes in the law have taken place which have had the effect of totally altering the scale of attorney's remuneration. Even fifty years ago the remuneration given by law for many things that an attorney was required to do was, it is respectfully submitted, inadequate to the labour and skill required, but such inadequacy was partially compensated by the remuneration allowed for many matters of form and routine that required little or no labour or skill on the part of the principal; and consequently when such matters of form and routine were abolished, and the remuneration attending them was consequently lost, the residue of business, consisting of matters really requiring labour and skill, became the sole subject-matter of the attorney's business, and the inadequacy of the remuneration, told more strongly on the average profits of the profession. The principal changes in the law, which we submit have had the effect we refer to, are the following:—

1. The Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt on Memento Process.

Fifty years ago the custom was to commence every action for debt by holding the debtor to bail, upon which the plaintiff's costs amounted to 10l. and upwards for each defendant, without more labour than is now involved in issuing an ordinary writ of summons, the costs of which are from 2l. to 2l. 10s.

2. The Abolition of the Jurisdiction of the Superior Courts in Actions under 20l.

Before the institution of the county courts, a main part, if not the principal part, of the profit of common-law business resulted from the actions under 20l., which were brought in considerable numbers, in cases where no doubtful questions of law or fact existed, and involved little or no trouble to the practitioner. The scale of costs in the county courts is such that few attorneys can afford to practise before those tribunals.

3. The Abolition of Fines and Recoveries.

The only real labour and skill involved in a fine or recovery was in the preparation of the deed to declare the uses or to make a tenant to the precipe. The formal part of the business, with its remuneration, is now gone; the deed remains under a different name.

4. The Abolition of the Lease for a Year.

This document, formerly an almost invariable accompaniment of every conveyance or mortgage of freehold property, was of so simple a character that it was usually not drafted at all, nor did the solicitor take any trouble whatever about it, but it was ingrossed by the law stationer from a common form, taking the parcels and the names of the parties from the draft release; so that on almost every conveyance of freehold property fifty years ago, the solicitor for the purchaser or mortgagee was paid 1l. 1s. and upwards in addition to his present charges, without taking any additional trouble.

5. The Abolition of Attendant Terms.

The assignment of attendant terms was only less a matter of form than the lease for a year. It was usually drawn in the solicitor's office, but when the release was prepared it presented no difficulty whatever, and could be readily drafted from the abstract by a clerk without legal knowledge, but was paid for at the same rate as the main deed of conveyance of the freehold. The past devolution of the term also generally increased the length of the abstract without a corresponding increase of the difficulty of the title.

6. The Introduction of the Practice of printing Proceedings in Chancery, &c., and the greater Brevity of Bills, have cut off the Remuneration formerly received by Solicitors for Copies of lengthy Proceedings copied by a Stationer at 2d. a Folio, and charged for in Costs at 4d.

We would here respectfully assure your Lordship that we do not object to any of the measures of reform above noticed, but, on the contrary, approve of them highly; nor do we contend that the profession is in the long run injured by the abolition of any sort of work that can be shewn to be unnecessary. It is needless to remark that the sweeping away of so large a portion of the business of attorneys, by decreasing the total amount of business to be divided amongst a fixed number of practitioners, has involved very considerable loss, and no little suffering to the generation who were in practice when those changes were made. That such is the case is proved by the fact, that the number of attorneys has remained for many years past nearly stationary, whilst the general population of the country has largely increased, and the wealth and business of the nation still more largely. The loss that has been so entailed upon our branch of the profession has been serious, but has resulted from the abolition of abuses which have been swept away for the benefit of the community at large, and the class who benefited by those abuses, though they have suffered from the change, have not thereby acquired any claim for legislative relief. But that to which we do seek to direct the attention of your Lordship, is the indirect effect of the changes in question, namely, that whereas fifty years ago the remuneration of an attorney for an attendance charged 6s. 8d., or for the drawing of a draft charged 1s. a folio, or for the instructions for a draft charged 6s. 8d., may have been (though we submit that owing to the gradual alteration in the value of money it was not) just as inadequate as it is now. Yet inasmuch as the payment for what an attorney really did do, was then accompanied by payment for a variety of things which he did not do, or for which he was over paid—the average remuneration for a life of labour expended in the profession of an attorney was, fifty years ago, far more than it is at present. Either, therefore, the average remuneration of attorneys fifty years ago was far too high, or it is now far too low.

It is, however, not necessary that we should rest our case solely on the above general argument, as it will be easy to see, from a very cursory examination of the charges usually allowed to attorneys on taxation of costs, that they are grossly inadequate where the thing to be done involves real labour.

For example: 6s. 8d. is the ordinary charge allowed for an hour's labour, and if a whole day is consumed the taxable charge is 2l. 2s.

For drawing a deed of fifty folios the remuneration would be just 2l. 10s.

It is needless to multiply instances further, as the above items substantially govern the scale of charges, and affect the whole system of taxation of costs.

The remedy proposed by your Lordship for this state of things is, that attorneys should be allowed, with certain restrictions, to make special bargains with their clients for extra remuneration. Whilst approving of this alteration, we venture to submit to your Lordship, that it will not go to the root of the evil. So long as the legal scale of costs remains as it is, it will be considered by the public, that a practitioner bargaining for an extra remuneration is taking some advantage of them, and the extent to which the privilege conferred by your Lordship's bill will be made use of is, in our opinion, very limited. We believe the real cure to be, the alteration of the ordinary scale of remuneration; and we submit to your Lordship, that the considerations above set forth shew that such an alteration would merely be in the nature of a readjustment of the scale of payment for work which has been deranged, by an alteration in the nature of the work to be done, and bringing back the average remuneration for real labour towards the same rate at which it formerly stood.

This end, we would suggest, should be accomplished by rule of court, superseding the present scale of costs, and substituting higher rates.

The following are the chief alterations which we would suggest to your Lordship should be made:—

1. A formal attendance not consuming much time, and where no advice was given on new facts, might be charged, as now, 6s. 8d.; but when an attorney is asked to advise on difficult questions of law, 10s. 6d. or 13s. 4d. should be allowed, and a continuous attendance of an hour's duration should, in all cases, be allowed 13s. 4d.
2. The instructions for a conveyance, mortgage, or settlement, when the subject-matter was of the amount or value of 300l. or upwards, should be charged 13s. 4d.; and for matters of the amount or value of 600l. and upwards, a further ad valorem fee; or a gradual scale should be allowed —say, for example, 10s. for purchases or settlements, and 5s. for mortgages, for every 100l. above 500l. up to 2000l., and half those amounts for every 100l. above 2000l.; and attending completing should, in all cases above 300l., be allowed 13s. 4d.

3. Attendance before an arbitrator, or in court, as an advocate, should be allowed 1l. 1s. an hour.
4. A suitable charge for brief, or other preparation, should be allowed to an attorney attending as advocate before an arbitrator.
5. A journey per day, or a day's continuous labour at home, should be allowed 5l. 5s.
6. In Chancery business the papers prepared as instructions for bill, which really involve the main responsible duty of the plaintiff's solicitor, should be fully allowed for in taxation between party and party at the same rate as a case for the opinion of counsel would be allowed as between solicitor and client.
7. In common law. Attending court when the cause is in the paper should be allowed for at 2l. 2s. a day; when tried, 5l. 5s. a day.
8. In both common law and Chancery letters between the country attorney and the agent should be allowed for at the usual rate. Any letters exceeding three folios should be chargeable at 1s. a folio, like any other document.

We venture respectfully to submit the above considerations to your Lordship, without professing thereby to have exhausted the subject, but as what appear to us the main grounds for an alteration of the present system, and as an indication of our view of the sort of alteration required. And we submit to your Lordship an expression of our opinion, that by offering an adequate remuneration for real labour, the hands of the respectable part of the profession who use their efforts to discourage useless or improper litigation, to shorten needless verbiage and useless inquiries, and otherwise to co-operate with the real reformers of the law, will be so strengthened that the public will be directly as well as indirectly the gainers. Unless the profession of an attorney and a solicitor offers the same prospect of remuneration as mercantile life to the youth of the middle classes, the educated middle classes will not bring up their sons to it, but it will fall into the hands of a lower section of society, for whose honourable conduct there will not be the same security.

We are, my Lord, your most obedient servants,
For the Committee of the Liverpool Law Society,
WILLIAM A. JEVONS, President.
WM. CLARE, Hon. Sec.

Hackwood Park, Basingstoke.

The Lord Chancellor presents his compliments to the President and Committee of the Liverpool Law Society. He has received their memorial, which contains matter requiring the most serious consideration. The Lord Chancellor begs leave to suggest the propriety of their communicating with other law societies on the important subject of their letter to him.

It would afford the Lord Chancellor very sincere pleasure to be auxiliary in removing the just subjects of complaint which exist in the unfair regulations that now injuriously affect the profession of attorneys and solicitors; but this cannot be effected unless there be a pretty general agreement among the members of that profession as to the alterations that ought to be made.

ANOTHER CURE, THIS WEEK, OF ASTHMA OFTEN YEARS' DURATION, BY DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS, communicated by Mr. M. BELL, Chemist, 63, Clarendon-street, Oxford-street, Manchester, 7th November, 1864:—"Mrs. Ann Southwood, Hill-street, Manchester, had pains across the chest, head-ache, difficulty of breathing, pains in the loins, and a dry cough for ten years; short respiration (30 in the minute). All kinds of medicine were tried, but with little effect. She at last tried Dr. Locock's Wafers, and, having taken three boxes, she felt herself perfectly cured. She requests me to offer you this for publication, that others may obtain a similar benefit."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 19, 1864.

EACH great political party promises law reform, and each succeeding session of Parliament is opened by a speech from the Throne, in which the Sovereign, by the mouth of the Lord Chancellor, announces that important measures for effecting amendment in the law will be laid before Parliament. It is, therefore, desirable to consider what branches of our municipal law call for more immediate amendment. The law of marriage, as it prevails in the United Kingdom, has been a good deal discussed since the case of Yelverton v. Yelverton was tried in Ireland, and an issue raised as to the validity of a marriage alleged to have been valid both as an Irish and Scotch marriage. That case was again brought prominently before the country, on appeal from the Scotch Courts to the House of Lords. The main question raised on appeal was, whether there was a marriage by a promise de futuro cum copula; and after hearing an immense amount of evidence, their Lordships, though differing in opinion, decided that no such marriage was proved. The case has been discussed both by the public and the profession, and both have denounced the law as bad, and as needing reform. The chief fault found seems to be the want of unity in the law of the three kingdoms. Let us then inquire what are the essentials to creating a valid marriage contract in each country. In England up to the time of the passing of Lord Hardwicke's Act in 1753, there were three different modes of creating a valid marriage contract. First, there was a solemn celebration in facie ecclesiæ, in the main similar to a marriage as now celebrated between members of the Church of England; secondly, clandestine marriages, which had the bare sanction of having been celebrated by an ordained minister, and no other formality whatever; thirdly, marriages by consent, or, as they were sometimes called, consensual marriages. These last were valid by an immediate interchange of consent to a present contract of marriage. It was a form of marriage at that time perfectly valid, not recognised, indeed, by the temporal courts till a celebration had taken place in church, but either party could compel celebration. Till celebration the husband had no title to his wife's personalty; nor had the wife of such a marriage the rights of coverture; nor were the issue legitimate; but neither of the contracting parties could enter into any other contract of marriage during the life of the other. Thus stood the law of England till the 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, which aimed, as the preamble shews, at clandestine marriages; sect. 8 renders a marriage celebrated without banns or a license null and void; by sect. 13, persons married by consent are deprived of the only means of making such a marriage perfect, for it declares, that no suit shall be brought to compel celebration. The act imposes, as legal requisites to a valid marriage contract in England, publication of banns or a license, and the presence of two witnesses besides the officiating minister; and an entry in the register, signed by the minister, contracting parties, and witnesses; and the marriage must take place between the hours of eight and twelve. The act renders void the marriages of persons under age without the consent of parents or guardians. The stat. 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, amended Lord Hardwicke's Act in certain particulars; but in substance, the law as to the marriage of members of the Church of England is governed by Lord Hardwicke's Act, the only important alteration in the law created by the act of Geo. 4 being a repeal of that portion of Lord Hardwicke's Act which rendered null and void the marriage of persons under age without consent of parents or guardians. The last-named act, instead of making such a marriage void, imposes a penalty on the guilty party of forfeiture of all property accruing on the marriage. The requisites of Lord Hardwicke's Act were found to give great offence to every denomination of dissenter, and in consequence the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, was passed, which enables persons who object to marry in facie ecclesiæ to repair to the registrar, and upon giving certain notices, and procuring certain certificates, to marry either before that officer or in any registered place appointed for the purpose; two witnesses are, however, necessary, and the marriage must take place between the hours of eight and twelve. Ireland, until the 58 Geo. 3, c. 81, followed the continental law in respect of the constitution of the marriage contract. That statute, however, extended the provisions of Lord Hardwicke's Act to Ireland. The law in that country, as amended by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 81, is almost similar to the law of England. The law of marriage differs in Scotland most materially from the law as it now is in England; chiefly, however, because the provisions of Lord Hardwicke's Act do not apply to Scotland. The marriage contract in Scotland is governed by the ancient law of Europe. There the maxim of the Roman law, "Consensus non concubinitas facit matrimonium," prevails. Marriage is a mere civil contract, independent of any formality whatever. It is true, marriages in facie ecclesiæ are by far the most common even in Scotland, still marriages by consent, or consensual marriages, are perfectly valid for all purposes. Marriages in facie ecclesiæ are by the law of Scotland to be celebrated in compliance with the orders of the Kirk, which requires a proclamation of banns, and a celebration by a minister of the Church of Scotland, in the presence of two witnesses. There is, however, no formality required. The Scotch law still hold as valid a clandestine marriage, being a marriage similar to that of the same name valid in England until the passing of Lord Hardwicke's Act, the only requisite being the presence of a priest. This form of marriage is of all the least common. Then there is the marriage by consent, which is either per verba de presenti, when the parties deliberately accept each other as man and wife, when consummation is presumed, or per verba de futuro cum copula; as where the words are not of present import, but only amount to a promise of marriage, and copula follows, but the copula must be proved. This was the canon law which was the basis of all matrimonial law in Europe; and Scotland in this respect followed the canon law. The leading case as to a marriage per verba de presenti, is that of Dalrymple v. Dalrymple (2 Hagg. Consist. 54), where Lord Stowell reviews the whole subject. A leading case as to a marriage by promise de futuro cum copula, is the case of Pennycook v. Grinton (12 Morr. 677). It must, however, be distinctly proved that the promise preceded the copula, for a promise after copula does not constitute marriage, unless intercourse be renewed in such a way as to shew that the new copula follows upon, or is connected with, the promise. (See Bell's Dic. and Dig. of the Laws of Scotland, tit. "Marriage"). In order to prove the promise the contract must be in writing, or it must be proved on oath. The promise must be made in Scotland, but the proof of it may be by the writing of the party promising made anywhere. (Vide judgment of Lord Wensleydale in Yelverton v. Yelverton). This license of the law of Scotland in permitting a marriage contract to be perfect, without any formality or publicity whatever, has led to uncertainty as to the validity of so many Scotch marriages; and when we bear in mind that the law of domicile does not effect the validity of the marriage contract, it nearly touches our marriage law in England. Thus, formerly, if two persons went into Scotland for a few minutes, and in the presence of two witnesses acknowledged each other to be man and wife, a perfectly valid marriage was contracted. Lord Brougham's Act has, however, to some extent, remedied the more pressing evils likely to arise from the facility for contracting a hasty or imprudent marriage prevailing so near this country. The 19 & 20 Vict. c. 96, has, however, put an end to what were familiarly known as Gretna Green marriages, and renders it necessary that one of the contracting parties to such a marriage should have resided in Scotland for twenty-one days previous to such marriage. Lastly, there is the marriage by habit and repute, which is a good marriage by the law of Scotland. It is founded on the principle, that it would be unjust to permit a man to introduce a woman as his wife, and treat her as such, and afterwards to permit him to degrade her from that status. But if the habit and repute have begun by avowed concubinage, a palpable change of purpose must be shewn in order to establish a marriage by habit and repute. (See Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland). As to the degrees of consanguinity and affinity, the laws of England, Scotland, and Ireland agree. We may here, too, remark, as to the whole question of the law of marriage, that though the lex loci governs the contract, yet the lex loci will not be allowed to decide whether a marriage is within the prohibited degrees; for it has been said that no law ought, for the sake of comity, to give effect to a foreign law which is contrary to its own policy or morality. See Paterson's Compendium of English and Scotch Law, and the cases of Fenton v. Livingston, 31 Scotch Jur. 578, and Brook v. Brook, 3 Sm. & G. 481, where the late Sir Cresswell Cresswell, when called in to assist Vice-Chancellor Stuart, delivered an elaborate judgment, deciding that a marriage celebrated during a temporary residence in Denmark, between an English widower and his deceased wife's sister, was null and void, although, by the law of Denmark, marriages between persons so related by affinity are lawful. This decision is very important, because, but for it, persons desirous of evading the law, in respect of contracting a marriage within the prohibited degrees, had only to take care and select a country where the degree of affinity sought to be infringed is not prohibited, and contract a perfectly legal marriage according to the law of such country. History shews us, that in most countries some formalities attend the entrance into the married state; certainly in all civilised countries consequences of the utmost importance, both to person and property, follow upon that contract. It must, therefore, of necessity be admitted, that uncertainty as to the validity of so important a contract is to be deplored; indeed, the disastrous consequences of uncertainty have been fully disclosed in the case of Yelverton v. Yelverton. That the validity of a marriage should depend in any case on evidence of no fixed kind, is most unsatisfactory. It is difficult to say what possible benefit can arise from such a law prevailing in any country; least of all in such a country as Scotland, where the family tie is drawn even closer than in England, and where the tenure of land has departed even less than in England from its feudal character; where, too, there are enormous estates the subject of strict entail. It may not be the duty of England to press upon Scotland any measure to reform her municipal law; still less a branch of it so eminently social as the law of marriage; at the same time, all will admit that the sooner the law of the three kingdoms, in respect of marriages, is assimilated, the sooner will the annals of the House of Lords, as an appellate jurisdiction, be freed from the melancholy disclosures which now incurber its pages. The present Lord Chancellor has, in the Yelverton case, had the whole law brought fully before him, and must be well aware of the evils arising from the uncertainty of such a state of law prevailing in Scotland. Uncertainty, always painful, is doubly distressing upon such a subject as the fact of marriage. This might be said to be a just retribution in many cases; but the punishment is unfortunately attached to the innocent as well as the guilty. Let us hope that something may be done to put an end to such a state of the law, and that Lord Westbury will add another to his great measures for the amendment of the law, by an act rendering necessary some public formality to the contracting of all future marriages in Scotland.

WINTER ASSIZES.—Mr. Baron Channell, one of the judges assigned to take the Winter Assizes, has appointed the following towns and times for so doing:—Winchester, Thursday, Dec. 1; Hereford, Thursday, Dec. 8; Chelmsford, Monday, Dec. 12; Maidstone, Thursday, Dec. 15; Lewes, Wednesday, Dec. 21. These are the days for opening the commissions at the respective places. Business will begin at ten o'clock on the following morning.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE, WITH WHICH IS UNITED THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

1, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.
Nov. 16, 1864.

SIR,—The second meeting of the Department of Jurisprudence and Amendment of the Law will be held here on Monday next, the 21st instant, when a paper will be read by Mr. Alfred Waddilove, D.O.L., on "The Expediency of abolishing the Rules of Evidence which exclude the Testimony of the Parties in certain Civil Suits, and of Defendants in Criminal Trials."

Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Q.C., M.P., will take the chair at eight o'clock.

We are, Sir, your obedient servants,

GEORGE W. HASTINGS,
General Secretary.

G. HARRY PALMER,
ARTHUR J. WILLIAMS,
Secretaries of the Department.

°° The Standing Committee of the Department will meet at seven o'clock.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I beg, through the medium of your columns, to inform those of your readers who may be articulated clerks, that a memorial to the council of the Incorporated Law Society lies for their signature at Mr. W. Harrison's, law stationer, 116, Chancery-lane, a few doors south of the hall of the society.

The object of the memorial is to ask the council to establish law classes, or else to amplify the lectures which are annually delivered under their superintendence, so as to admit of personal intercourse and close communication with the lecturers.

It is intended to present with the memorial a sort of report, embodying the substance of several letters which I have received from the members of both branches of the Profession, expressing for the most part their approval of the course now being adopted; and, among others, letters from the Master of the Rolls, Sir J. P. Wilde, Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood, Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Mr. Daniel, Q.C., Mr. J. G. Phillimore, Q.C., &c.

If those gentlemen who are unable to attend personally to sign the memorial will authorise me or some one else to do so, I shall feel obliged.

It will give me great pleasure to receive suggestions for the management of the proposed classes, as well as remarks upon the existing means for the instruction of articulated clerks generally, in whose education I take a deep interest, being myself one, and feeling most acutely the great disadvantage under which we labour in this respect.

Sincerely hoping, Sir, that you will be pleased to insert this letter in your journal,

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
W. J. FRASER.

NEW GENERAL ORDER IN BANKRUPTCY.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861.

Friday, Nov. 11.

From and after the 1st December next, numbers 47 and 51 of the Rules and Orders made in pursuance of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849, and dated the 19th October, 1852, shall be, and the same are hereby, rescinded, and it is ordered as follows:—

1. That thenceforth no messenger or usher of the Court of Bankruptcy in London, or of any district court of bankruptcy, or any clerk or other person employed in any department of either of such courts, shall make any office copy, or other copy, of any petition, affidavit, order, or other document or proceeding, filed in such courts, or of any bill of costs left with the Master, or with any registrar thereof, for taxation.

2. That in the court in London all office copies of every such petition, affidavit, order, document, or proceeding aforesaid, and of every such bill of costs aforesaid, shall be made under the direction and control of the chief registrar of the court; and that in the district courts all such office copies shall be made under the direction and control of the respective registrars thereof, and no office copy whatever shall be made or delivered out, except on a written requisition by the solicitor or party requiring the same, addressed to such chief registrar, or other registrar aforesaid.

3. That all office copies shall be made by such person as the chief registrar, or other registrar aforesaid, shall appoint, and shall, except as to figures, be fairly written at length, and shall be sealed with the seal of the court, and delivered out by the person so appointed without any unnecessary delay, and in the order in which they shall have been bespoken, and not more than three halfpence per folio of ninety words shall be charged or paid for any office copy so made and delivered out.

4. That no fee shall be allowed for attending to bespeak office copies, or for attending to receive the same.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.

A MEETING of this society was held on the 14th inst., at No. 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square. The Hon. George Denman, M.P., Q.C., presided.

A paper was read by the Rev. F. D. Maurice, intitled, "Ought any Person to be excluded from giving Evidence on the Ground of Religious Unbelief?" Two questions were involved in the discussion. One concerned the worth of an oath as a test of the credibility of a witness; the other concerned its worth as affecting the conscience of a witness, hindering his inclination to falsehood, and giving him a bias towards the truth. It seemed to him, after considering the authorities on the subject, that religious unbelief ought not to be a reason for excluding a person from giving evidence in any case. He did not ask that oaths should be abolished if persons were willing to take them, but let a person who declined to take an oath be permitted to decline it without proving that he was a Quaker, or belonged to any other religious persuasion that prevented him from taking it. It should not be overlooked that the whole land was interested in obtaining evidence, and, instead of rejecting it, every person should be stigmatised who, under any pretext, withheld it.

The Chairman declared that the subject was most interesting, and was one on which he entertained a strong opinion. He objected to the present practice, and believed that in many cases an oath in a court of justice was used as a mock sanction that did a great deal of mischief and no good.

Mr. Daniel, Q. C., objected to the present rule in operation. It was suicidal in reference to the object for which it was established, and was not a sound one.

Mr. Best was strongly inclined to believe that oaths ought not to be abolished; but, on the other hand, the refusal to take them should not be urged as a ground of incompetence against a witness.

Mr. Charles Clarke agreed that oaths should not be abolished; but when persons declined to take oaths from religious motives, or because they held them to be of no value, they ought not to refuse their testimony when that testimony was required as a matter of necessity. They should encourage the principle of a man telling the truth, and afterwards test his evidence, but should not reject it.

Mr. H. S. Reilly said it was important that the law should be adapted to the present state of society. There were persons who would be inclined to say, "I have no definite opinion; I am a sceptic, and suspend my judgment." Such a man was engaged in the investigation of the subject, but if during the course of such investigation his testimony was required, was his evidence to be rejected? Others might think that it was not given to them to determine in favour of atheism or deism. Those persons called themselves secularists, and they thought it was beyond their province to determine on such a point.

Mr. A. Lawrence said it was a scandalous state of things when a criminal assault could be made on a woman with impunity, because her testimony was rejected on the ground that she had no religious belief, or was in a state of doubt.

Mr. Joshua Williams said the truth should be obtained from every source, unless the accepting of it involved greater evils than the loss of the truth itself. Therefore the evidence of the persons of whom they had been speaking should be received.

Mr. Hake asked if any gentleman in that room would require a jury to disbelieve a witness if there was nothing to be alleged against him except his unbelief.

The Rev. Mr. Maurice replied, and a vote of thanks was passed to him on the motion of Mr. Kerr, seconded by Mr. Clarke.

The proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

An important decision in respect to church rates was given in the Court of Queen's Bench on Wednesday. A Mr. Pedlar and others were summoned before the justices at Wellington, Somersetshire, for non-payment of church rates. Mr. Bennett, of Serjeants'-inn, appeared for them, and took objections to the validity of the rate. The justices, after consulting with their clerk, decided that the objections were bona fide, and dismissed the summons, thus leaving the churchwardens to look to the Ecclesiastical Courts for a remedy. Later, another summons was issued, and again the same objections were raised. The justices this time carried matters with a high hand. Declining to consult with their clerk, they overruled the objections, and made an order for the payment of the rate. Application was then made to the Court of Queen's Bench for a rule to quash the order, and this came on for argument on Wednesday. Without calling upon the opponents of the rate to reply to the arguments which had been raised in its support, the Court held that the magistrates' order must be quashed.

DEATH OF LORD MANNERS.—We have to announce the death of Lord Manners, which occurred at Hastings on Monday. His Lordship had long been in a precarious state of health, his disease being consumption. John Henry Manners-Sutton, second Baron of Foston, Lincolnshire, was eldest son of a distinguished father, the Right Hon. Thomas Manners-Sutton, who became Solicitor-General in 1805, and shortly afterwards one of the Barons of the Exchequer, and in 1807 was appointed Lord Chancellor of Ireland, when he was raised to the peerage as Baron Manners. He was born in 1818.

M. BERRYER.—The Courrier du Pas de Calais states, that as soon as it became known at Calais that M. Berryer was to arrive on Friday by the steamer from England, the barristers of that town, and many of the principal inhabitants, determined to pay their respects to him. A great number accordingly assembled on the quay, and greeted him with loud cheers on landing. M. Berryer expressed himself highly gratified with this manifestation, and before leaving the station, he received all the members of the Calais bar, and thanked them for the honour they had done him.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 26, 1864.

It has been frequently asserted that the judges of the common-law courts are too few in number for the efficient performance of the work of those courts. It would seem that the learned judges are themselves decidedly convinced of the truth of this assertion, and lose no opportunity of intimating their convictions to all concerned in their proceedings. Thus, the sittings of the full court in the Divorce Court, which ought by statute (23 & 24 Vict. c. 144) to be held on the seventh and succeeding days of every term, were omitted in this Michaelmas Term, because it was said to be impossible to spare from the other courts the number of judges required to constitute a full court. Again: the sittings in error after term are stinted to seven days, because a larger space of time would interfere with other more pressing and important demands on the time of the members of the Court of Appeal. As there are nineteen appeals from the Queen's Bench, four from the Common Pleas, and five from the Exchequer, it is obvious that these cases are expected to be got through, we will not say heard, with the velocity of more than five in a day of five hours; and it is equally obvious that such a hurried and cursory investigation of what may fairly be assumed to be intricate and important points of law cannot, and will not, be satisfactory either to the profession or the parties concerned. And we may observe, that the dissatisfaction, rather loudly expressed, at a somewhat similarly perfunctory hearing of appeals last year, when the cases were broken down, rather than dismissed or considered, would (we should have thought) have prevented a repetition of the experiment. Again: within these last few days, the judges of the Queen's Bench have assured Sir George Grey that it is utterly impracticable to hold a civil winter assize at Manchester, however much the numerous population of that important city may have anticipated and desired it, because all the learned judges will at that period of the year be fully occupied elsewhere. It is true, that it was hinted that such an assize was not needed, and that even at Liverpool a winter assize was against the wishes of the profession; but it seems clear that both Liverpool and Manchester demanded such an assize, and that a paucity of judges was the only real obstacle to its not being accorded to both.

The arrears at Nisi Prius in London, particularly in the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, are brought forward in further confirmation of the proposition, that work at the common law is too much for the existing judges. Nor should it be forgotten that these arrears are regarded by the public with much deeper concern, if not murmuring, than by the profession, although to the latter they are in the long run injurious. Arrears involve necessarily heavy additions to the expense of proceedings, and contingent failures of justice through the death or absence of parties or witnesses; and the consequence too often is the compromise or the abandonment of the clearest rights.

On the other hand, it must not be forgotten, that, at the present time, the lamented illness and absence of one judge is an exceptional cause of some extra work being thrown on his colleagues; but, even with that allowance, it may be doubted whether the common-law judges are so overburdened with work as is supposed, or whether, at any rate, a perfectly satisfactory remedy cannot be devised without resorting to the creation of any additional judges. It is certain, that during the term that has just passed, only the Court of Queen's Bench has had its time fully occupied; whilst the Common Pleas has experienced some, and the Exchequer great, difficulty in finding occupation. A return of the hours of sitting of the last-named court, and the work done at those sittings, might throw a new light on the subject. It might appear that, if no other alteration could be made, a transfer of business from one court to another might effect a great relief. We believe, however, that this would be a partial and inconclusive remedy. The truth is, as we believe, that the work of the judges has not increased, but that its character has changed; and that the true remedy for their complaints is an alteration in the mode of transacting legal business. Court business has diminished, whilst Nisi Prius business, chamber business, appeal business, and criminal business have greatly increased; and yet the manner of transacting these, and the time allowed for their transaction, has remained unaltered for the last thirty years. The lawyers do not march with the times. It may be quite true, that the judges of themselves cannot remedy this, and that it lies with the Legislature, who, by stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 70, originally fixed the constitution of the courts, the length of the terms, and of the sittings after terms, so to modify and alter the sittings of the various courts in error, in banc, at nisi prius, and in chambers, as to insure a speedier and more satisfactory dispatch of business; but it must be added, that it is most unlikely that any suggestion of this sort, on the part of the judicial body, would pass unheeded for a single session.

We will assume, that they have really not had leisure to draw up any formal suggestion or scheme of reform of any kind—not even in those after-dinner movements, which used to be ingrossed with “cur. adv. vult.” pursuits (now unhappily so uncommon), and will offer some views of our own on the matter, at the risk of being thought guilty of some presumption.

We consider that all the business of the three courts at chambers should be discharged by one judge, sitting there the whole of the day; each judge taking this duty in weekly rotation.

It is also right that there should be constant, if not daily, sittings at Nisi Prius; and here, again, it would suffice, if one judge tried the cases for all the three courts; whilst this duty might be taken in monthly rotation. Special as well as common juries should be in attendance, if required, and thus a fruitful source of delay and injustice would be cut off. There should be no impediment thrown in the way of the trial of country causes in London, or there should be four country assizes a year; but we believe the former course would be most satisfactory, both for suitors and the profession. The existing terms should be shortened in duration, and there should be a fourth term in July.

The shortening of the terms would afford longer time for the hearing of appeals, and also (if required) for trials at Nisi Prius; though it is apprehended, that after the present remanets were cleared away, the proposed constant sittings at Nisi Prius would effectually prevent any further accumulation of arrears. Moreover, by the proposed changes, much more time and leisure would be obtained for the due performance, by a competent number of judges, of their ordinary criminal business, as well as their appellate duties in the Divorce Court, the Court of Criminal Appeal, and the House of Lords. If the above changes cannot be effected without the dissolution of one of the courts, and the absorption of its members and staff into the remaining courts, it is believed, that even that blow would be endured by the profession and the public.

LAW REPORTING.

[WE have received for publication the following paper by one of the members of the committee appointed at the meeting of the Bar, held on Dec. 2, 1863.]

The opinions brought to the notice of the committee by its members or correspondents, tended to some one of the four following conclusions:—

1. That the existing practice should not be interfered with.

2. That arrangements should be made for providing, with or without the co-operation of the parties, solicitors, counsel, and judges, or some of them, a printed official record of every decision in the superior courts, with the facts and reasons in which it proceeds.

3. That a new series of reports in all the courts should be established, under the management of a council duly appointed (by the Inns of Court or otherwise), without the privilege of exclusive citation.

4. That such a series should be established, with the privilege of exclusive citation.

There was, further, a difference of opinion among those who desired a new series of reports under control, as to the constitution of the council of management—whether it should be appointed by the benchers of the Inns of Court, as representing the bar, or by the judges or the Lord Chancellor.

I believe that a majority of the committee, and a majority of those lawyers who sent suggestions to the committee, inclined to the last of the four conclusions stated above, and that the committee would have adopted that conclusion, if a majority of them had not despaired of obtaining the privilege of exclusive citation. But, as I believe also, that of those lawyers who have given any serious attention to the subject, a majority disapprove of the scheme recommended by the committee, and think, with me, that it would lead to nothing but an aggravation of the existing evils. I am encouraged to reproduce, for the consideration of the profession at large, some arguments which were submitted to the committee in favour of the establishment of a series of reports with the privilege of exclusive citation.

The choice between those schemes which are designed to limit the number of citable cases more strictly than is now done, and those which would increase them, even to the extent of recording every judicial decision, seems to depend mainly upon considerations of degree and convenience.

Theoretically, every decision is a binding declaration of the law until it has been overruled, but, in fact, a few only are preserved, and the great majority are forgotten. A record of all the decisions of the superior courts would be useless for direct reference, and more than nine-tenths of it would be absolute waste paper.

How far the labours of the selectors could be lightened, or made more efficient, by means of official records, is a question of detail. They should have ready access to the written judgments and the papers in the cause; but whatever is not recorded for some other purpose should be noted by the reporter. If he relied on the notes of a professional short-hand writer, he would degenerate into a compiler.

A selection being confessedly necessary, should the citation of cases excluded from it be allowed? At present this may be done, although, as a rule, unpublished cases are irrecoverably lost; and where official records are kept (as in the registrar's book in Chancery, and the journals and papers of the courts of ultimate appeal), they are very seldom searched for the discovery of precedents, but only (and that seldom) to correct or supplement a report or note otherwise obtained.

The loss of a judicial precedent merely leaves the decided point where it previously stood; and no case of importance is likely to be lost under any system of reporting which the profession would tolerate. Provision might be made, that any decision of value which did not appear in due course might, upon sufficient authentication, be subsequently published in the authorised reports.

But the inconvenience to lawyers in advising or preparing for argument would be great, if unreported cases could be hunted out from the bulk of original records, and cited for a particular occasion; and the law would gain nothing in certainty by such a practice.

The habit of relying on parallel cases, rather than on the power to apply general principles, tends to weaken the legal judgment, and to impair the scientific character, and with it the certainty, of the law. Our reporters do not see, or fail to act upon, this truth, and persevere in reporting case after case of the application of the same settled rule of law, with as much profusion as if they were decisions moulding some new act of Parliament into shape, forgetting the essential distinction between a legal principle which is already part of the law, and an enactment not yet assimilated. The result is an annual burden of reports, far too unwieldy for systematic study, or even for exhaustive reference in practice, so that opinions are very often given, and cases are not unfrequently decided, upon an insufficient consideration of the authorities.

The proposal to record every decision for the purpose of citation, is founded on a mistaken or strained interpretation of the maxim stated above. The maxim is sound, but the reason on which it rests limits its application. Judges are required to follow precedent, in order that the law may be, as far as is possible, certain and known. A decision inconsistent with a prior known decision is a grievance, because it unsettles the law, and disappoints just expectations. But a precedent, not generally known or easily accessible, is practically non-existent, and no harm is involved in its inconsistency with a subsequent decision. Decisions are important as precedents only in proportion to their notoriety, and it is a mere superstition to attribute any value to those which are not published in such a manner as to be within the reach of ordinary professional research. But if all the decisions in all the courts were recorded, the records would, by reason of their bulk, be practically inaccessible and unknown. The useful precedents must be selected, either by volunteers, as at present, or under authority; and if any decision not included in the selection were followed as a precedent, the losing party might justly complain that his cause was not decided upon argument and consideration of known principles of law, but was concluded by a rule not previously promulgated. If it is said, that many important and valuable decisions never find their way into the regular reports, it must be answered, that an unknown decision cannot be valuable or important. One case known to the profession at large is more valuable than a dozen cases known only to a few. If the question involved in such a fossil precedent is doubtful, it is better for the science of the law that it should be decided, after free argument, in harmony with the existing state of society and of professional opinion, than that judgment should be given in accordance with a decision which has never influenced either practice or opinion. If the question is not doubtful, no precedent is needed.

These considerations involve a condemnation of the practice of receiving manuscript notes, and extracts from official records of decisions. Even the correction of an error in a published report, after it has been generally received and acted upon, is objectionable. If the law, as it appears by the report, is evidently unsound, it should be overruled on that ground; if it is only doubtful, to correct the precedent is to incur the certain evil of change, without any considerable assurance of amendment.

The recommendation of the late committee is, in substance, though not in terms, that the regular reporters, or a majority of them, with others, shall combine and produce either a single or a twofold series of reports, so excellent in quality, so recommended by the prestige of a council of management appointed by the Inns of Court, and so well supported by a numerous subscription list, and, if possible, also by a Government subsidy, as to drive all competitors out of the field. It is unlikely that such a combination would be effected voluntarily, and the scheme could not easily be brought into work if there were a single dissident among the regular reporters.

If such a series were commenced, it would probably only add another to those which exist, and, at best, could not prosper, except on the condition of copying the defects of the others, which would strive more desperately than ever to deserve success by reporting everything. As competitors, both parties would use the weapons of competition. The probability, nay, certainty, of a powerful and able opposition must be kept in view. Would it be possible to combine the regular reports and the Law Journal in one interest? If not, success is impossible. No voluntary combination would submit to such a despotic management as is necessary to secure excellence. If the reputation of reports depended on the judgment of the best lawyers, a series of judiciously selected cases might succeed. But the majority of the 3000 or 4000 buyers, to whom the projectors must look for a market, and whose tastes they must consult if they are to depend upon commercial success, estimate the merits of a reporter by the number and length of his reports, and no lawyer in the minority could safely neglect any reported case merely because it ought not to have been reported.

Little amendment is to be expected from any alteration which leaves reporting open to competition—a word suggesting principles of social economy and liberty that are foreign to this inquiry, which is not how to secure the most abundant and the cheapest supply of a commodity, but how to obtain one single article in the best and most convenient form. One good series of reports being given, a second would be a nuisance.

The profession cannot be expected to acquiesce in the continuance and growth of an evil system out of regard for the very slender pecuniary interests of the authors of the mischief.

It is not proposed to abridge the right of any person to report what cases he pleases, but only to regulate the citation of reports, and to protect the profession and the judges from an overwhelming accumulation of authorities.

The judges, though theoretically they are bound to consider and allow due weight to every precedent, must clearly have some discretion as to the sources of their information; and the practice of receiving every report which purports to have been made by a barrister is of very modern origin, and has been disapproved of by more than one judge. It certainly is not beyond the power of the judges to sanction what they may consider a sufficient provision for reporting all decisions worthy of being preserved, and to reject information from any other source. But if the judges were unwilling to exercise so much authority, application might be made to Parliament. The suggestion, that under such a system important decisions might be improperly suppressed, is certainly chimerical. If the judges who decide a case have the right to require that it be reported, and if the reporters are independent of the judges, and may report what cases they think fit, there can be no danger of suppression from any wrong motive.

Exclusive citation is said to be impossible, because the Courts cannot be asked to be, or to pretend to be, ignorant of a recent and notorious decision on an important point which has not found its way into the regular reports. If the unreported decision is not to be reported, no evil would follow from the neglect of it, for there would be no conflict of authority; and if it is to be reported, the authorised reporters can be required to furnish a statement of it. But it has never been proposed that the Courts should take no notice of unreported decisions within their knowledge. All that is asked is, that they should refuse to look at unauthorised reports, the object being to abolish the nuisance of a multiplicity of reports.

I believe that a very large majority of those who have formed any opinion on the subject, desire to obtain, by some means, a single series of reports on which they may rely without referring to any others.

This means, a series preferable to all others, and implies a desire for the extinction of all competing reports, for that which is preferable will be bought to the exclusion of the rest.

Such a result must be brought about either by competition or by authority. If, by competition, the proprietors of the other reports will first lose their profits, then carry on for a time at a loss, and finally retire from the contest, without honour and without compensation—for they will have been vanquished in fair fight; and the reporters who are deprived of their occupation will be equally without remedy. But to proprietors and reporters who are stopped by authority, compensation may be given. The only considerable claims would be those of the proprietors and editors of the regular reports, and of the Law Journal, and they might, probably, be sufficiently compensated by shares in, or a charge upon, the new undertaking.

It seems, therefore, that the desire which the majority have expressed will be carried into effect with more fairness to existing interests if it is done under authority.

With a view to leave room for what have been called the ephemeral reports, it has been suggested that there may be a permanent series, from which alone cases should be cited after the lapse of a year from the decision. But this would involve either the insertion in the permanent series of every case included in any of the ephemeral reports, or the absurdity of a case being an authority for a few months and no longer, and would not, on either condition, be an improvement on the existing practice. A weekly series of notes prepared by the authorised reporters, and containing no cases that are not intended to be fully reported, is desirable.

I cannot, therefore, avoid the conclusion, that if anything is to be done it must be done under authority—establishing a proper system—forbidding the citation of unauthorised reports—and providing a fair compensation for injury to existing interests. The profits of a privileged series of reports would be amply sufficient for that purpose.

On the suggestion that judges and counsel should take a part in reporting, I will only remark, that reporting is a delicate and difficult art, requiring a special training, and the devotion of much time, attention, and research.

The existing system has been defended, because it provides occupation and training for young lawyers. No one who is acquainted with the practice of reporting, will rate that benefit very highly; and at best, the number who can enjoy it is insignificant. It is scarcely necessary to refer to the suggestion, that a large body of independent reporters constitutes a check upon the judges. So far as the judges require a check, they have it in the scrutiny of the suitors, solicitors, and counsel engaged in litigation, and in the reports and comments of the daily press. If a further check is needed, it is more likely to be found in a select, learned, and critical body of reporters than in the existing guerrilla.

The objects to be sought are—

A single series of reports, beyond which no one need or can look for authorities.

Settled rules for reporting, and the suppression of superfluous cases and superfluous details.

Regular and prompt publication.

Facility of reference.

The incidental advantages will be a large saving of book room, and of time and labour in reading and consulting the reports.

SUGGESTIONS.

Establish a council for reporting, consisting of, say, seven members, acting gratuitously. One appointed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, one by a majority of the common-law judges, one by a majority of the equity judges, two by the benchers of the Inns of Court, and two by the Incorporated Law Society. Each member to be appointed in the first instance for ten years, and then to be re-eligible only from year to year.

The council to appoint (and for cause stated to dismiss) the reporting editors and reporters, to regulate details, and to manage financial matters.

One reporting editor with a salary of £—, and one reporter with a salary of £—, to be attached to each court, with liberty to practise.

The reporting editor to be bound to be present in court a certain number of days in each term or session; and the reporter to be present, in person or by deputy, whenever the editor does not attend, subject to such exceptions as the council shall allow. Fine for non-attendance. The reporter may appoint a deputy, or, if the council thinks fit, two deputies, to be approved of by the council; and the reporter may, without cause assigned, dismiss his deputy. Salary to deputy £—. (The arrangement as to deputies seems to be the best way of securing a succession of tried and practised reporters).

Periodical returns of the actual attendances of the reporters to be made to the council, and to be open to inspection.

Convenient sittings to be provided for the reporters. Judge's clerk to be bound to furnish copy of written judgment on the day of delivery. Office copies of papers to be supplied gratis.

A short note of every case intended to be fully reported to be published within two weeks after the decision. A full report of the same case to be published within two months. Fine for delay. The remuneration of the reporters to be subject to taxation (as suggested by Mr. Hare). Notes to be published weekly; full reports monthly. No case inserted in the notes to be omitted from the full reports. Reporters to furnish certificate of any unreported case of which they have notes, on the request of a judge or Queen's counsel.

Reports to be fairly copied for the printer, and the full reports to be revised in MS. by the reporting editor, who is also to revise and be answerable for the proof sheets. The name of the actual reporter of each case to be appended to the report.

Two of the reporting editors to be appointed general editors, with an additional salary, to supervise the editing of the reports, and assist the council in securing the observance of general rules, and to prepare a digest of the reports for publication in April and October. The contents of the April publication to be repeated in that of the following October.

An outline of heads and subdivisions for a complete digest of every branch of law and practice, to be prepared by the editors, and printed for the use of the reporters and the profession, with blanks under each sub-head.

The cases in the reports to be numbered consecutively in each year. A case could then be noted in the outline digest by its number and the year of the century. As the preparation of the outline digest would be a work of considerable labour, it should be the subject of a special payment, and it would be well to circulate a proof for suggestions and corrections.

The reporters to prefix to each case a note of the point or distinct notes of the points for which it is reported, as they should appear in the digest, with a reference to the appropriate head and sub-head, and references to leading cases for noting up. (References to treatises would give an undue advantage to those selected, and, for the interests of the profession, as well as in fairness to text-writers, actual and possible, should not be allowed).

Every case cited in the argument should be cited in the report, but the reporters should adopt some means of distinguishing those they consider to be in point from the rest. The facts and the arguments of counsel should be stated briefly.

The subscription to the reports and digest should be a fixed sum, irrespective of quantity; there would then be no temptation to unnecessary amplification.

The reports should be printed so that the cases of each year may be classified according to the jurisdictions of the several courts, and, if required, separately bound; but I think the example of the Law Journal should be followed in not selling the cases separately, except, perhaps, a selection of cases for magistrates.

The copyright of the notes, reports, and digest should be vested in the council. If a subscription for the weekly notes alone is allowed, it should bear a high proportion to that for the full reports, and efficient protection of the copyright would be necessary.

The revision of their judgments by the judges, when they are willing to undertake it, seems to be desirable. On the other hand, the Court should have no power to influence the selection of the cases to be reported, except, perhaps, the right to direct that any particular case shall be reported.

The Courts should resolve, or be required, not to listen to any other reports.

To the estimates of financial results already before the profession, I will only add the remark, that a privileged series of reports, even at a high price, would certainly have a very large circulation, while the amount of the matter to be printed would be probably less than one-half of the contents of the current series of regular reports. But the existence of the Law Journal as a valuable property, although it contains, in addition to the reports, the bankruptcy lists and the statutes, and is published at an annual subscription of three guineas, is sufficient to shew that the scheme now proposed would be self-supporting.

The best arrangements for printing and publication might be ascertained, after the settlement of everything else, by inviting suggestions from the law publishers.

GEORGE SWEET.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Although acknowledging that all students in one branch of the legal Profession ought to be grateful for, and do duly appreciate the efforts of, your correspondent Mr. W. J. Fraser, for the formation of law classes in connexion with the Law Society, I would suggest that a greater benefit would accrue if a society of articulated clerks, such as that to which I have the honour to be connected, were to make classes a part of their system of education. By such means a vitality would be generated which could never be attained in any other way. Those most directly concerned would take a greater interest in a movement which had had its origin from among themselves, and which would thus be maintained and managed by members of that particular class to which they belonged.

The course which might be pursued would be the reading of a series of papers on some branch of the law, by a regular succession of chosen members, who would, by benefiting others, benefit themselves. Each paper might occupy half-an-hour, after which questions and a friendly discussion might ensue.

The future generation of solicitors would thus have an opportunity of ascertaining the theory of the law by classes, at least equal to that which they now have of discovering the practice of the law by a "lustre" of pastime or drudgery in an attorney's office.

Should this course be pursued, I should be happy to subscribe a guinea towards the small expenses which would be incurred.

Your obedient servant,

WYNNE E. BAXTER,

Hon. Sec. of the Articled Clerks' Debating Society.
Bedford Park, Croydon, Nov. 21, 1864.

THE DISCIPLINE OF THE BAR—The Benchers of the Middle Temple, who some time ago decided that they would not disbar Mr. William Digby Seymour, and gave very strange reasons for so deciding, may take a lesson from the terrific sentence lately fulminated against Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy by their brethren of the Inner Temple. That unhappy gentleman is, we understand, "suspended for two years from attendance in the hall, library, and gardens" of that house.

THE SHIPPING LAW MANUAL: a concise Treatise on the Law governing the Interests of Shipowners, Merchants, Masters, Seamen, and other Persons connected with British Ships. Together with the Acts of Parliament, Forms, and Precedents relating to the subject. Being especially intended for popular use in Seaport Towns. By W. T. GREENHOW, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"The 'Shipping Law Manual,' by Mr. W. T. Greenhow, brings into a popular shape, and to the latest date, the entire body of legal regulations affecting the shipping trade of the country alike in relation to owners, merchants, masters, and seamen, and is especially adapted for ordinary use by all persons connected with the business of seaport towns."—Times, Jan. 31, 1883.

"The object of the author of this book is to popularise the Law of Merchant Shipping, and to compress within the compass of a single volume all that is necessary to be known by those directly interested in British navigation. It was no easy task to condense and arrange this mass of legislation, so as to make it intelligible to the general reader. But Mr. Greenhow has achieved it, and placed within reach of every one connected with shipping a valuable compendium of the law relating to that branch of industry."—Shipping and Mercantile Gazette. THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 3, 1864.

THE majority which carried the Bar Committee's scheme at the scanty meeting of Monday last was large enough to be recognised without a division, and may fairly be taken to represent a still greater proportion of the absentees, for among the minority were many who represented nothing but their own interests. That the scheme, in its present state, is approved of by all who voted for it we do not believe; but the meeting, with perhaps a just appreciation of the inertia of the bar, preferred immediate though imperfect action, to contingent and probably long-delayed, if ever attainable, perfection. They found the committee in existence as a centre of force, and their scheme as a nebulous mass—rather chaotic—but capable, it was hoped, of being elaborated into something like a cosmos of reports by the higher influences next to be brought to bear upon it. Upon the whole, we are glad that the compromise has been made, and we congratulate Mr. Daniel, to whose energetic and conciliatory conduct of the agitation its success—if it succeed—will have been mainly due, on the progress already made; while we trust that every one who has at heart the improvement of the law and the true interests of the profession will do his best to assist in the desired reform. We should have preferred a better arrangement, but a better arrangement does not seem to be presently attainable; while, on the other hand, that which is now in prospect, so far from being final or incapable of improvement, will, if it is established, have removed the principal obstacles to further improvement. But its success is far from certain. The profession at large are not yet fully aware of the importance of immediate and energetic action, nor will they become so until the magnitude of the evil, and the rate at which it is increasing and must increase until it is stopped by a radical reform, have been again and again set before them. We were, therefore, pleased to read, in a well-written article on the subject, which appeared in the Daily Telegraph of Wednesday last, the following vivid and correct picture of the present state of the common law:—

"A fine legal fiction imputes to every individual a complete and accurate knowledge of the whole mass of jurisprudence, and forbids any person to escape obligations by pleading ignorance of them. We now find, not only that the maxim is not true, but that it is the exact opposite of truth. Instead of everybody knowing the law, nobody knows it. The Chancery barrister studies equity, the special pleader the mysteries of pleading, the conveyancer the intricacies of title and assurances, the criminal practitioner the penal code; but not one of these men pretends to be versed in the business of the others, or even to have a complete acquaintance with his own. How is this? The answer is, that law has developed and propagated itself with such amazing fecundity, that the most assiduous industry cannot trace all its ramifications. Its growth is prodigious, like that of the aquatic weed which in some of our eastern counties has choked up rivers, and converted navigable streams into stagnant morasses. The manufactories of law are numerous, and their activity unwearied. First, there is the statute-book—the net result of the public labours of Parliament year after year. The volumes in which the general resolutions of the great council of the nation are annually recorded, constitute a vast and ponderous series; but even this mass is insignificant in comparison with the "judge-made law," the code of judicial decisions. We have six Chancery courts, three common-law courts, and several courts of appeal, besides other tribunals, sitting day by day during a great part of the year; and all these seats of justice contribute to swell the mighty flood of English jurisprudence. Every one of their decisions constitutes a precedent, which, so long as it is not overruled, binds courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction in analogous cases. Of course, many of the judgments contain no new principles, and are, therefore, omitted from the published legal reports. But, notwithstanding these omissions, the multitude of reported cases is far too great. Decisions which merely reaffirm settled points, and really contribute nothing to the stock of legal knowledge, are incorporated in these technical publications. Another complaint is, that as the law publishers pay the reporters according to the length of their contributions, the latter have an inevitable tendency to amplification and the insertion of impertinent matter. Nor are these the only evils. There are rival series of reports, and thus it happens that the same decision is reported several times over; and, as neither of the versions is strictly authentic, discrepancies between them occasion much trouble both to the bench and the bar. We repeat that this subject, technical though it be, is one of public interest. It is as important for us that lawyers should have good reports as that surgeons should possess good instruments. Litigation is not much less painful than surgery, and no argument is needed to prove that humanity gains by the keenness and exquisite ingenuity of the apparatus of vivisection. Moreover, the lawyers themselves, even though they are the natural enemies of the human race, deserve some little pity. They complain that their grievance is intolerable; that the tax upon their brains which the fecundity of the law imposes is greater than they can bear."

Mr. Daniel and his colleagues must, however, not only satisfy those whose support they seek of the necessity of reform, but convince them that what is proposed will be a reform—and not an aggravation of the mischief. They must come with at least all the "regular reporters" in their train, so that every subscriber to the new series may be assured that he is not subsidising "one more plague." They will thus, probably, secure all the present subscribers to the regular reports,—for though there are few who take in both the common law and the equity reports, yet the annual cost of either division of the regular reports very considerably exceeds the proposed subscription for the new series. Whether, having obtained the co-operation of the regular reporters, our reformers will be able to detach any considerable number of subscribers from the Law Journal, is doubtful. Unless they do so, they can scarcely hope for success. If they once establish themselves upon a sound financial basis, and if the management of the reports is satisfactory, they will either extinguish their rivals by the mere force of competition, or will have a good title to ask for Legislative interference.

Correspondence.

LAW REPORTING.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—If the very slender subscription list which the reporting committee of the Bar obtained, allowed any doubt to exist on the subject, the smallness of the meeting on Monday last, and the very narrow majority by which the committee's report was carried, are sufficient to shew that the Bar is not very interested on the subject of Mr. Daniel's scheme. On the other hand, the overwhelming majority which negated the principle of "exclusive citation," proves that the Bar has no intention to lend its aid to any interference with free competition in reporting. In other words, that it has no wish to cramp or limit the existing system of irregular reports.

Putting these two conclusions together, I think we shall not be far wrong in saying, that the only object which the Bar desire, or have in meeting resolved to effect, is an amendment of the present system, or no system, of the so-called regular reports. Very many members of the Bar would gladly see the regular reports altogether extinct. But as it seems to be assumed in the present controversy (though why it should be I am at a loss to understand), that the regulars must be continued in some shape or other, would it not be better to make the avowed object of the movement accord more nearly to that which it would appear is its real end? It would go hard, no doubt, with the committee to throw over that singular and eccentric production—their report, and take up in its stead some simple and practical plan for causing the regular reports to be brought out with something like regularity, and at something approaching a reasonable price. I believe, however, that if they will only have the magnanimity to do this, some good may even yet come of the present discussion. I believe that there would then be a chance of our obtaining a complete set of the authorised reports, at a cost of about 15*l.* a year (for I put aside altogether the "estimates" of expectant tradesmen), and of our having these parts delivered regularly at intervals of two or three months. This, of course, is not so grand an idea as the committee's scheme, but I fancy it is more likely to be realised; and as the primary object of Mr. Daniel's agitation has failed, I cannot see why the Bar should not seek some benefit from it, though the benefit may not be that which the projector himself had in view.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

B.

LAW REPORTING.

THE adjourned meeting of the Bar, convened by the Attorney-General to consider the report of the committee appointed on the 2nd December, 1863, was held in Lincoln's Inn Hall on Monday, Nov. 28. About 250 members of the bar were present.

The chair was taken by the Attorney-General at half-past three o'clock.

Mr. Daniel, Q. C. (in the place of Mr. Amplett, Q. C., the chairman of the committee, who was prevented from attending by a domestic affliction), moved that the report of the committee, or rather the scheme recommended by them, should be adopted. In so doing, he said the great object of the scheme was to establish—if possible without external aid—one standard set of reports, prepared with such care and skill, and published at such a moderate cost, as to command the confidence and support of the profession. He would not, he said, enlarge upon the evils of the present system, which he presumed were present to the minds of all. The scheme was, he believed, calculated to afford a practical remedy to a practical evil. That was its sole scope, for the promoters of it did not pretend to be law reformers. The committee had endeavoured to ascertain upon what footing, in a commercial point of view, the scheme could be put so as to be, if possible, self-supporting. A calculation had been made of the number of copies of the regular law reports sold about forty years ago, the time of Barnewall and Cresswell's Reports, in the Queen's Bench, a period anterior to competition. They found that there were then 4000 copies of the Common Law regular Reports sold, and 2000 of the Chancery. They had taken the latter, the lower number, as the basis of calculation. He had then consulted one of the most eminent printers in London—Mr. Clowes, of Stamford-street—as to the cost of printing a "part" of the "regular reports"—about the size of one of the most expensive, Clark's Cases in the House of Lords, which cost about 12*s.* 6*d.* He found, that on a circulation of 500, the cost would be 1*s.* 10*d.*; of 1000, 1*s.* 4*d.*; of 2000, 1*s.* 2*d.*; of 3000, 11*s.* 3*d.*; of 4000, 10*s.* 4*d.*; and on a circulation of 5000, 10*s.* 4*d.* These figures seemed to him so striking, as, if true, to shew that there was a radical defect in our present system as regarded the consumers, and a radical defect as regarded the reporters. He shewed the figures to Mr. Hemming, who pointed out, that the cost of correcting the press—which was in some of the reports as great as the cost of composing—had been omitted. If this were so, he thought that the supervision of an editor, as suggested by the committee, would so far improve the manuscript as to render an allowance of one-third a sufficient margin for the cost of correction, making Mr. Clowes's 10*s.* 4*d.* into 11*d.* per copy. Then, as to the salaries of reporters, the estimate was about 10,000*l.*, the first moiety of which was to be guaranteed (if required, and if possible) out of the Suitors' Fund or the Consolidated Fund. He had no desire himself that either of these funds should be resorted to; nor did he believe that it was necessary to have such assistance, or that, if it were so, that it would be attainable. But the committee had deemed it best to include that element as part of the scheme. It would be necessary, in order to raise 10,000*l.*, to have 2000 subscribers at 5*l.*, and he believed that number to be obtainable. He had then submitted the scheme to the Messrs. Clowes upon that basis, and asked them if they thought that it was practicable. Their answer was, "We are willing to accept it, and should be surprised if any printer were to decline." It appeared, then, quite possible to have a standard set of reports at a subscription of 5*l.* There would only, he believed, be eight volumes required in a year. As there would be a proper judgment exercised in the selection of cases, there would be no temptation to report cases which were of no value; nor would there be any inducement to occupy sheet after sheet in merely copying pleadings and documents at length, instead of simply stating the material facts. There would merely be a statement of the material facts, the substance of the arguments, and the judgment. At present there were about sixty "parts" of reports, or about twelve volumes published in the course of the year; whereas, he believed, there need be only eight. Mr. G. Sweet, a gentleman of experience, was of opinion that the reports might be reduced to one-half their present length. Mr. Hemming's estimate was one-tenth. One-half or one-third might safely be estimated. Thus, therefore, there need only be eight volumes a year. When they considered the enormous increase in the numbers of the profession, and the great extent to which the English reports were diffused over the world, he assumed that, with a subscription of five guineas a year, the scheme would be self supporting. And upon these premises, he moved that the report be adopted.

Mr. James Dickinson seconded the resolution.

Mr. W. M. Best rose to move an amendment, the omission of that part of the scheme which related to the editors. The new system would introduce all the evils of a divided responsibility; and if an editor had the power of striking out a case, or any part of a judgment, the independence of the reporters, and the trustworthiness of their reports, would be endangered, or rather destroyed, and a wide door opened for all kinds of influences. He observed a remarkable omission in the speech of the mover. At the last adjournment it had been proposed, that names of subscribers should be received as a test of the support which the scheme would receive. But as to that, a total silence had been observed. Yet that, it was manifest, lay at the basis of any calculation on the subject; and in the absence of that, all the estimates in the world were fallacious. As to the figures presented to the meeting, all he could say was, that he suspended his belief about them. He would not express any judgment on the report of the committee as a whole, but entertaining a serious objection to that part of the scheme which related to the control of editors, he moved that it be omitted.

The Hon. George Denman, Q. C. (a member of the committee), said he objected to the scheme, not upon detail, but upon principle. He thought it objectionable in point of principle, whether it failed or succeeded. Its success would depend upon securing a large number of subscribers—at least 2000; and with their help driving out of the market the existing reports which were very good. It would introduce a new set of reports, which would break the continuity of those which were now established, and thus would produce a great inconvenience. If it failed, then this expense and inconvenience would have been incurred for no useful purpose. And if it succeeded, it would establish a monopoly; and it was assumed that it would hardly succeed without. In that event it would soon become as bad as any, and thus we should lose our present reports without substituting any better, and with the great evil of establishing a virtual monopoly. And for what reason should this risk be incurred? Why was it necessary to establish this great joint-stock company of the Bar? He belonged to the Common-law bar, and most of those present were of the Chancery bar; and he believed the scheme originated at the Chancery bar, and had its principal supporters among them; and in Chancery, where the judge had to decide questions of fact as well as of law, it was obviously much more difficult to report than in the courts of law, where juries determined matters of fact, and the law was thus so completely severed from the fact. Therefore it might be, that the evils of the present system were felt more at the Chancery bar than at the Common-law bar; but his own impression was, that they were not so much felt at common law. Whatever they were, however, he did not think it would be well to adopt the proposed scheme, which, if it failed, would do a great injury, and if it succeeded, would only establish a monopoly. In the end it must come to that; and then he apprehended that few cases would be reported, and we should lose all the benefits of competition and free trade. He had a strong impression that every case which could at all be looked upon as involving a point of law ought to be reported. He knew that it often happened that cases were not reported which, as it turned out, were of great importance, and were afterwards required. He believed that it would be most dangerous to allow to any body of persons a power of excluding or suppressing cases deciding points of law; and he foresaw great evils from the proposed scheme, whether it failed or whether it succeeded.

Mr. Osborne Morgan objected to that part of the scheme which proposed that the present regular reporters should have the option of engagement under the new system. That was, in his view, inconsistent. If the present reporters did their work well, why want a new system? If they did it so badly as to require a new system, why retain them? He rather agreed with Mr. Best as to the editors. He knew very well how easy it was to spoil a good report, and how hard it was to mend a bad one. He observed that it had not been stated how many subscribers had set their names down. He had heard that the number was hardly a tenth of the number required. He moved that the words in the twelfth article, stating that the authorised reporters shall have the first offer of the appointment in their respective courts, be expunged, and that in their place a few words be inserted, to the effect that the council may, if they think fit, make arrangements with the existing authorised reporters as to the terms on which they would be willing to discontinue their reports.

Mr. Joshua Williams (a member of the committee) moved, that "no reports can be sanctioned by this meeting which are not invested, by paramount authority, with the privilege of exclusive citation." He said he had throughout the inquiry been persuaded that the bar would have to choose between the principle of authority—involving exclusive citation—and the evils of the existing system; for, without authority and exclusive citation, the new reports must merely compete with others, and only add one more to the already numerous competitors. Now, authority could only be obtained from some paramount power. It could not be conferred by any "council" of the bar. It would be strange to leave it to a body of barristers to exercise the functions of a court of error, and decide that such and such cases should or should not be cited with authority. The authority must be derived from some power equal to, and, indeed, higher than that of the judges; and what could that be but the authority of Parliament? Parliament alone could enact that such and such reports and no others should be cited. With such authority the profession would obtain what they wanted; otherwise, they could not. There was no security in the scheme that there should be reports of all cases decided (upon questions of law) in the courts, which was very important. For that purpose, the reporter must be always in the court. But, in his view, the whole scheme would be useless without the element of absolute authority.

Mr. Thomas Webster spoke in favour of the scheme. A former meeting of the bar had condemned the existing system, and had appointed a committee, in whom they and the whole of the profession had confidence, and they would stultify themselves if they did not adopt the report of that committee. The scheme was not perfect, perhaps; every human scheme must be more or less a compromise. It was idle to deny the evils of the present system—their prolixity, their defects, their delay. The delay alone was a great evil.

One great object was to have all the cases published as soon as possible after the end of the legal year.

Mr. Ince doubted the figures which had been laid before them. Estimates, he said, were proverbially delusive, and, from actual experience, he was persuaded that the scheme could not succeed with less than 3000 or 4000 subscribers. How could such a subscription list be expected when the Law Journal already gave them all that they wanted at not more than half the proposed subscription?

Mr. Hemming, after some remarks, disclaiming the proposition for compensating the present reporters, moved, as a further amendment, "That the committee be requested to circulate among the bar the financial data upon which their scheme is based, the result of the appeal made for subscriptions, and other information in their possession, which, in their judgment, would assist the bar in forming an opinion of the principle and feasibility of the project."

Mr. E. Webster moved—"That, in the opinion of this meeting, it is expedient that the law reporting and the law reports be brought by the Government to the notice of the Legislature, with a view to their amendment." He deprecated the idea of the bar exposing itself to the imputation of being actuated by a commercial principle.

The Attorney-General now put the various amendments in their order. They were all negatived by show of hands, except Mr. Hemming's, upon which there was a close division; but it was lost by 111 to 126.

The original resolution for the adoption of the report was then put, and although, upon a show of hands, the numbers were at first doubtful, and there was a call for a division, yet as that call (it being nearly six o'clock) was not pressed, the show of hands was taken a second time, and then the resolution was declared to be carried.

Mr. Daniel then moved, "That the Attorney-General be requested, as president of this meeting, to communicate the resolution, and a copy of the report, to the Lord Chancellor, the Benchers of the several Inns of Court, the Society of Serjeants' Inn, the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, and the Society of the Chancery Bar, with a request, on behalf of the meeting, that they severally will be pleased to favour the scheme." In reply to questions, the learned gentleman said, the committee had received encouraging letters from solicitors in all parts of England, and that the number of present subscribers was something under 300. He added, that he and the committee objected to that course being pursued, because they thought that gentlemen would not be so likely to put their names down before the report was adopted.

The resolution was then agreed to, and the proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the Attorney-General and the committee.

PLAN FOR RECORDING JUDICIAL DECISIONS.

A Letter to the Right Hon. Lord WESTBURY, Lord High Chancellor, &c. (by permission).

MY LORD,—Judicial decisions have the force and effect of law, and yet they are not recorded or published. The following plan is proposed to remedy the anomaly:—

1. That the junior counsel for the plaintiff and defendant shall jointly prepare, and at the hearing hand to the judge, a concise statement of the facts upon which the decision must be based, and the names of the cases upon which they respectively rely.

2. That the judge shall, after hearing the cause, alter (if necessary) this statement, so as to constitute a complete record of the case, and add thereto his own written decision, signed.
3. That this document shall be filed in Court, and be deemed "The Decree" or "Judgment" in the case, and shall be forthwith printed at the expense of the parties, and copies sold at cost price.

Your Lordship, with the advice of the Equity Judges, seems to have power to order that this shall be the practice in Courts of Equity.

Some incidental advantages would arise from requiring this joint statement from the juniors; it would

- First, tend to narrow the contested points;
- Secondly, aid the leaders at consultations;
- Thirdly, enable the judge quickly to grasp the bearing of the case he had to try;
- Fourthly, and tend to check rambling, pointless, illogical "arguments;" Whateley says, "The first step is to lay down distinctly the propositions to be proved."

The expense of printing the decree (which might, like the cheap edition of the statutes, be sold in single sheets for a limited period, and afterwards only in volumes) would be covered by half-a-guinea from each suitor, for which he would receive many advantages:—

First, the guarantee that counsel had mastered and marshalled the facts of his case, which is "more than half the battle;"

Secondly, save the solicitor's time and you save the client's money; the solicitor's time is now wasted in drawing up the decree, and by the disputes and references to which it constantly gives rise, the costs thus incurred are, I understand, never less than 2*l.*, and sometimes exceeds 200*l.*

Thirdly, for a bare copy of a decree, 10*s.* or 1*l.* is now payable.—(Ord. 36, r. 12).

The object of this plan is to secure the permanent record of decrees and judgments, every one of which, even though unrecorded, and entirely forgotten, has the force and effect of law, and are binding on the whole nation.—(Lord St. Leonards' Law of Property, p. iv).^o

This plan does not touch the question of law reporting; the function of the reporter is wholly different; it is his duty to select and report cases which—

First, constitute new developments of the common law;

Secondly, overrule former decisions;

Thirdly, construe acts of Parliament; or

Fourthly, determine novel points of practice.

Reports would be just as much needed if judicial decisions were printed as now; only their accuracy could then be tested.

I have the honour to be, my Lord,

Your Lordship's most obedient humble servant,

THOMAS DE MESCHIN, LL. D.

44, Chancery-lane, Nov. 22, 1864.

^o We have not been able to find in Lord St. Leonards' work the remarkable proposition for which it has been cited.—Ed.

ANNOYANCE BY THE PASSAGE OF RAILWAY TRAINS.

THE case of Piper v. Hammersmith Railway Company has revived a question which has been several times discussed, but never actually decided, namely, whether railway companies are bound to pay compensation for damage arising from the vibration, noise, &c. caused by the passage of trains in the ordinary course of the traffic.

In considering this question it should be borne in mind that the legislative powers given to railway companies embrace three particulars:—

First, powers to acquire lands.

Secondly, powers to commit nuisances during the construction of the works.

Thirdly, powers to commit nuisances in the user of the works when constructed.

It is obvious that this third set of powers is equally necessary with the other two, inasmuch as the running of a locomotive in an inhabited neighbourhood would otherwise be a nuisance at common law, which might be abated or stopped by injunction.

With respect, however, to many other works of a public nature, the Legislature has not thought it necessary or fitting to give powers to use them in such a manner as to cause nuisances, and the promoters are therefore confined to such modes of user as are sanctioned by the common law.

This is well illustrated by the case of the Gas Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), by the 29th section of which the promoters are expressly declared to remain liable for any nuisance committed in making or supplying the gas; and accordingly, in the well-known case of Broadbent v. Imperial Gas Company (7 De G., Mac., & G. 436; 7 H. L. C. 600), the defendants were restrained from allowing noxious vapours to flow over the plaintiff's market garden.

Works, however, of this class, if of any magnitude, cannot be constructed without the risk of interfering, at least for a time, with some right of way, or light, or water, amounting to a nuisance. Promoters of such undertakings always, therefore, take powers both to acquire lands and also to commit nuisances during the construction of the works.

Now, it will be found that the Lands Clauses Act, which was intended to apply not only to undertakings such as railways, but also to those of the same character as the gasworks last mentioned, provides compensation only for the exercise of the powers common to the two classes—that is to say, for the exercise of the powers to acquire land, and to commit nuisances during the construction of the permanent works, leaving the compensation to be given for injuries (if any) to be done in the user of the works, to be dealt with by the statutes giving power to commit such injuries.

Thus, in Broadbent's case, where the question turned only upon the 68th section of the Lands Clauses Act, the learned judges laid down the often-cited rule, that compensation is given in respect of the calculable damage caused, or to be caused, in or by the execution of the permanent works of the company authorised by statute; as, for instance, obstructing ways or injuring lights; and that every act other than the erection of the permanent, if properly done by the company, in pursuance of the statute, whatever damage it may cause, is considered sufficiently compensated for by the public benefit expected to follow, and is neither a subject of action nor compensation.

Instances, however, of the extension of the provision for compensation, where the authority is given to commit subsequent nuisances, will readily be found. For example, in the Waterworks Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), where, it being contemplated that the promoters will commit fresh nuisances from time to time, it is provided that compensation shall be paid (sects. 6 and 12) for lands or streams taken or used, or injuriously affected, by the construction or maintenance of the works, or otherwise by the execution of the powers thereby conferred.

So, also, in the Railway Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20) the same principle is laid down with sufficient clearness. The section which gives the general power to use the line is the 16th, whereby it is enacted, that the company may do all acts necessary for making, maintaining, altering or repairing, or using the railway; and then immediately follows the clause, "Provided always, that in the exercise of the powers by this or the special act granted, the company shall do as little damage as can be, and shall make full satisfaction in manner herein, and in the special act, and any act incorporated therewith, provided to all parties interested, for all damage by them sustained by reason of the exercise of such powers," including, of course, damage done in the exercise of the power to use the line.

The sum of the whole matter, therefore, seems to be, that the vibration caused by the passage of a train would be a legal nuisance if it were not authorised by statute; but the Legislature, in giving the authority, has provided, in the same sentence, that compensation shall be paid for the exercise of it; thus bringing the law of railway companies into harmony with the principle of natural justice, which requires, that when a right of action is taken away by statute, the party deprived should receive an equivalent for it.

It would be extending this article to an unreasonable length to examine the authorities in detail; suffice it to say, that The London and North-western Railway Company v. Bradley (3 Mac. & G. 336) leaves the question entirely open. Penny v. The South-eastern Railway Company (7 El. & Bl. 660) was decided on other grounds, so that the observations which fell from some of the learned judges on this point were merely dicta, whilst Croft v. The London and North-western Railway Company (3 B. & S. 436) appears to be in favour of the view here contended for.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.—The third meeting of the Department of Jurisprudence and Amendment of the Law will be held at their rooms, 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, on Monday next, the 5th December, when a paper will be read by Mr. F. S. Reilly, intitled "Observations on a Digest of Law, with reference to the Address delivered at York by the President of the Department." The chair will be taken at eight o'clock. The standing committee of the department will meet at seven o'clock.

MINUTES OF THE LAST MEETING.—Monday, Nov. 21, 1864.—Mr. W. T. S. Daniel, Q. C., in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. A paper was read by Dr. Waddilove, on "The Expediency of abolishing the Rules of Evidence which exclude the Testimony of the Parties in certain Civil Suits, and of Defendants in Criminal Trials." A discussion followed, in which Mr. Edgar, Mr. F. Hill, Mr. Allen, Mr. Hastings, Mr. Palmer, Dr. Walter Smith, Mr. Dillon, Mr. Newmarch, F.R.S., Mr. Elliott, and Mr. Shaen took part. It was moved by Mr. Teulon, and seconded by Mr. Stuart, "That the paper read by Dr. Waddilove be referred to the standing committee of the department, to consider the same, and to take any steps they may consider expedient thereupon." Dr. Waddilove moved, and Dr. Smith seconded, an amendment, that the debate be adjourned. After some observations from Mr. Teulon, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. Hastings, the amendment was withdrawn, and the resolution was put and carried in the following form:—"That the paper read by Dr. Waddilove be referred to the standing committee of the department, to consider the same, and to report thereon." The Department then adjourned to Monday, the 5th December, at eight o'clock.

A CLERICAL BARRISTER.—An interesting question is submitted to the benchers of the Inner Temple. Early in the present year a member of a noble family in this country, having gone through the usual course of terms, was duly called to the Bar by the honourable society. It has since come to the knowledge of the benchers, that the new barrister-at-law is a priest in holy orders, and the doubt now arises whether, under the circumstances, the gentleman having withheld information as to his clerical character, the call to the Bar is valid, and whether the profession of a barrister is such a secular calling as duly ordained clergymen are prohibited from entering upon. Such a case has not arisen since that of Horne Tooke, and that does not bear much analogy to the present; for, although Mr. Tooke went through his terms, he was not "called." When he presented himself for admission to the Bar, the question arose whether it was lawful to admit as a barrister a duly ordained clergyman; and in consequence of the doubts entertained, no benchers could be found to move the call, and further proceedings dropped. There are several clergymen who have been called to the Bar, and one bishop (Dr. Connop Thirlwall, Bishop of St. David's), but they were called before they were ordained; and there are one or two clergymen now practising at the bar, but they were also ordained after being called, so that it is held to be doubtful whether they are violating the canons of the Church in returning to their first profession. The case now under the consideration of the benchers of the Inner Temple is, it is believed, the first that has arisen of a barrister being called after having entered into holy orders, of which under the present state of the law a clergyman cannot divest himself.—Express.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 10, 1864.

THE Court of Common Pleas has just delivered judgment in a case of some interest to all classes of the community. The question as to who is a traveller within the meaning of that word, as used in the stats. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, s. 4, and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118, s. 2, has several times come before the Courts at Westminster, and the judges have in several cases delivered judgments, holding, that on a given state of facts, as found by justices, persons were or were not "travellers." It is difficult, independent of its legal aspect, to define the meaning of the term. The word is no doubt derived from the French verb "travailler," to labour, and certainly, in the popular use of the term, we imply a journey causing labour, either for pleasure, profit, or health. We should never apply the word to a person who went a short distance for any purpose. We can hardly contemplate the term ever being applied to a day's pleasure, much less to a walk of a few miles.

The question, however, is important both to travellers and innkeepers, whatever may be the meaning of the word. Indeed, the construction put on the word, as used in the act of Parliament, under which the appellant in the case decided in the Common Pleas, was convicted, has the effect of rendering almost every individual a "traveller" at some time or other, and most men are travellers every day.

The question was raised on a case stated for the opinion of the Court, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, and the Court has in fact delivered a judgment which upholds the authority of the two leading cases decided upon the very same point, one as late as the year 1861. The stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, s. 4, provides, "that no person shall open any house or place of public resort for the sale of fermented or distilled liquors, or sell therein such liquors in England or Scotland, before the hour of half-past twelve of the clock in the afternoon, or where the morning divine service in the church, chapel, kirk, or place of public worship shall not usually terminate by that time, before the time of the termination of such service on Sunday, or in England, before the like hour on Christmas-day or Good Friday, or any day appointed for a public fast or thanksgiving, except as refreshment for travellers." The statute (18 & 19 Vict. c. 118), by sect. 2, provides, that "it shall not be lawful for any licensed victualler, or person licensed to sell beer by retail, to be drunk on the premises, or not to be drunk on the premises, or any person licensed or authorised to sell any fermented or distilled liquors, or any person who by reason of the freedom of the mystery or craft of vintners of the city of London, or of any right or privilege, shall claim to be entitled to sell wine by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises, in any part of England or Wales, to open or keep open his house for the sale of or to sell beer, wine, spirits, or any other fermented or distilled liquor, between the hours of three and five o'clock in the afternoon, nor after eleven o'clock in the afternoon on Sunday, or on Christmas-day or Good Friday, or any day appointed for a public fast or thanksgiving, or before four o'clock in the morning of the day following such Sunday, Christmas-day, Good Friday, or such days of public fast or thanksgiving, except to a traveller or to a lodger therein."

In Atkinson v. Sellers (5 C. B., N. S., 442) the information was laid under the latter act, and the evidence was, that the public-house was situate at Garston, a village about five miles from Liverpool; and it was further proved before the justices, that five persons, and some ladies, started from Liverpool, in two carriages, for a drive for pleasure on Sunday afternoon, and after driving eight miles, arrived at Garston between the hours of three and five in the afternoon; they drove into an inn yard, put up their carriages, ordered provisions for their horses, and went into the public-house themselves, and demanded refreshment, which they had; and they remained in the public-house all the afternoon, and then returned to Liverpool. It was also proved, that the publican asked each party whether they were travellers, and received an answer in the affirmative. The justices, on this evidence, convicted the publican, but the Court of Common Pleas held the conviction wrong; the Court holding, that to constitute a traveller, within the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118, s. 2, it is not necessary that the party should be journeying on business. In Taylor v. Humphreys (10 C. B., N. S., 429) the information was under the same statute, and it was proved, that the appellant was an innkeeper at King's Norton, a village near Birmingham, a favourite resort of artisans of Birmingham; that at about four o'clock in the afternoon of Sunday four men were in the public-house smoking and drinking; one of them was the driver, and another the conductor, of an omnibus which plied from Birmingham to King's Norton, and which had been driven there that afternoon, as usual; that the other three persons had walked from Birmingham that afternoon, and had called at the defendant's house, a distance of four miles, and afterwards returned to Birmingham, two by omnibus, and the other on foot; that the publican asked whether they were travellers, and that they answered in the affirmative. The publican was convicted. The Court held the conviction wrong, and decided, that though a man who goes to a place a short distance from his home for the mere purpose of refreshment is not a traveller, within the meaning of the exception in the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118, s. 2, yet one who goes to an inn for refreshment in the course of a journey, whether of business or pleasure, whether on foot or otherwise, is a traveller within the meaning of the statute; Chief Justice Erle saying, that in so deciding, the Court intended to give effect to the judgment in Atkinson v. Sellers. In the case of Taylor v. Humphreys, decided by the Court of Common Pleas in last term (see 10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1153), the information was under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, s. 4, which restricts the sale of liquors before half-past twelve on Sunday, except as refreshment for travellers; and the facts, as stated by the justices, were, that a police constable went to the publican's house at twenty minutes past eleven in the forenoon, and found the door closed, but unfastened, opened it and walked in, and found in the house thirty-two persons, consisting both of men and women; some seated; some in the tap-room; others standing in the passage; some were drinking ale, and some had ale before them; and some were smoking. The publican, on being questioned, said they were travellers, and they had the appearance of artisans from Birmingham. The public-house was situated about two miles and a half from the centre of Birmingham. Two of the persons found drinking in the house were examined on oath, and they swore that they were inhabitants of Birmingham, and had walked from the town, through the fields and lanes, that morning, and had so extended their walk, the one to seven, and the other to eight, miles, and had stopped at the defendant's house on their way home. They stated that they did not leave home with the intention of calling at the defendant's house. It was also proved that they were asked, before they were supplied, whether they were travellers, and that they had answered that they were. The justices convicted the publican. The result was, that the case has been sent back to the justices for further evidence; but the judgment of Chief Justice Erle is valuable. He says, "We place great reliance on the local knowledge of the magistrates. They can tell whether the appellant (the publican) believed, with reason, that the guests were travellers, taking refreshment according to the exception given, or were seeking a pretence to that character, for the purpose of profaning Sunday, and passing it in drinking." The case is of great importance to a large class of persons, when we consider the liabilities of innkeepers. They are liable both to an indictment and an action for refusing to supply a guest at legal hours; and the hours of church service during which an innkeeper is forbidden to supply refreshment to the public in general, being legal hours in the case of a traveller, it follows that an innkeeper is liable to supply a traveller with refreshment during those hours, and refuses to do so at his peril. Chief Justice Erle, in the course of his judgment, says, that if a publican believed, or had reason to believe, when he supplied the drink, that he was supplying refreshment to a traveller, he ought not to be convicted under the statute; and he further lays it down, that a "traveller" is a person journeying for business, or pleasure, or health. The question, who is a traveller within the meaning of the statute, would seem, therefore, to be a question for the justices. Their decision should, however, be governed by the evidence as to the intention of the person sought to be brought within the definition. If the intention of a person be to go to a public-house for the purpose of drink, however distant that public-house may happen to be from the place where the person resides, he is not a traveller, within the meaning of the exception in the statute. If, however, the intention of the person was to take a walk, however short, and whether for pleasure, business, or health, and the person stops at a public-house, and takes refreshment; even though he may have selected a walk where he is likely to fall in with a public-house, he is a traveller, within the meaning of the exception in the statutes, and will be entitled to all the privileges of that favoured class, and is armed with the most powerful weapons known to the law to enforce his right to refreshment.

We may add, that this last decision is entitled to even more weight than either the other cases referred to, from the fact that the judgment was a considered judgment.

THE LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACT, SECT. 85.

COTTER v. THE METROPOLITAN RAILWAY COMPANY
(10 Jur., N.S., part 1, p. 1014; 12 Weekly Rep. 1021).

THIS recent case, which is one of considerable practical importance with reference to the law of railways, turned upon the 85th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), which provides for the case of a railway company being desirous of taking possession of lands at once, without waiting for the expiration of a tedious negotiation, or possibly of a yet more tedious lawsuit. In such case they are empowered to deposit in the bank, by way of security to the owners of the land, a sum of money, either the amount previously claimed by the party with whom they are dealing, or such a sum as shall, by a surveyor appointed by two justices in manner therein (sect. 58) provided, be determined to be the value of the lands in question, or of the interest therein, to which such party is entitled. The company are also empowered to give to such party a bond under their common seal, with two sufficient sureties, in a penal sum equal to the sum so to be deposited, "conditioned for payment to such party, or for deposit in the bank, for the benefit of the parties interested in such lands, as the case may require, under the provisions therein contained, of all such purchase money or compensation as may in manner thereinbefore provided be determined to be payable by the promoters of the undertaking (the company), in respect of the land," with interest at 5l. per cent. These preliminaries having been properly completed, the company may at once enter on the lands, and proceed to construct their works.

In the present case the plaintiff, who was lessee of the house in question, had claimed 3650*l.* for purchase money and compensation. The company caused the house to be valued by a surveyor appointed by two justices, who estimated the value at 200*l.* This sum the company paid into the bank, and delivered a bond in the following form:—"Now, the condition of the above written bond is such, that if the said railway company or their successors shall at any time hereafter pay unto the said William Cotter, his executors, administrators, or assigns, or deposit in the bank for the benefit of the parties interested in," &c., following the words of the act as quoted above.

The plaintiff filed his bill for an injunction to prevent the company from taking possession, on the ground of the invalidity of the proceedings. Upon the hearing before Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., the injunction was granted. A number of points arose upon the case, which we will refer to seriatim.

It appeared, in the first place, that the surveyor had made the valuation without going inside the house at all, from a mere inspection of the exterior. It was held, obviously in accordance with reason, that the surveyor had not used the means which he was bound to see, in order to make a fair valuation. His Honor thus laid down the law upon the point:—"If, in any case under the 85th section, where a surveyor had made his valuation, he had done so in such a manner as to enable him to do it fairly, the Court would not disturb it; but here it was not so, and, therefore, the Court would interfere."

It was, again, objected, that the bond did not accurately describe the house in question; but his Honor thought this immaterial, inasmuch as there could be no question as to the identity of the house, it being apparent on the face of the bond that William Cotter was interested in it. With this should be compared the case of Willey v. The South-eastern Railway Company (1 Mac. & G. 58; 6 Railw. Cas. 100), in which it was held, that the land was sufficiently identified, by reference to the map of the railway. It follows, therefore, as a general proposition, that the bond need not contain a description of the land taken, if its identity be sufficiently pointed out, whether by reference to the railway map, as in Willey v. The South-eastern Railway Company, or by the introduction of the name of the lessee, as in the present case, or otherwise.

The bond in the present case was, however, held bad, on account of the introduction of the words, "at any time hereafter," which are not in the act.

Again, the surveyor had not included in his valuation the trade fixtures. His Honor adhered to his own former decision, in Gibson v. The Hammersmith Railway Company (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 221; 11 Weekly Rep. 299), that they must be included.

The above are the most important points connected with the present case. We propose to add a short statement of the various points, which have been from time to time decided with reference to the form of the bond to be given under this section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.

The rule appears to be, that the words of the act must be exactly followed without alteration or addition. Thus, it has been held, that the condition must not be for payment "on demand" (Langham v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 1 De G. & S. 486; Poynder v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 5 Railw. Cas. 196), or "at any time hereafter" (Cotter v. The Metropolitan Railway Company, 10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1014; 12 Weekly Rep. 1021); that the words "as the case may require" must not be omitted (Poynder v. The Great Northern Railway Company, supra); and that the words "or otherwise" (deposit in the bank, or otherwise, for the benefit of the parties interested, &c.) must not be inserted. (Hoskins v. Phillips, 3 Exch. 181).

It appears, however, that the condition of the bond may be for payment to the landowner, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, as the case may be, although these words are not in the act. (Hoskins v. Phillips, 3 Exch. 181; Cotter v. The Metropolitan Railway Company, 12 Weekly Rep. 1022).

In a case where the land belonged to five tenants in common, and the company paid into the bank one sum to the joint account of the five, and delivered to them one bond, conditioned for payment to the five, nominatim, "heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns," &c., it was held that the proceedings were invalid. (Langham v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 1 De G. & S. 486; 5 Railw. Cas. 263). And the same result appears to follow from the case of Daubney v. The Manchester, &c. Railway Company (10 Law T. 263). It appears to follow, that the company should deal with tenants in common separately for their separate interests.

It is hardly necessary to say, that as the company cannot retire from their notice to treat, the bond must be given in respect of all the land included in the notice to treat, and not of part only. (Barber v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 2 De G. & S. 55; 5 Railw. Cas. 401).

Where the landowner has, under sect. 92 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, required the company to take the whole of a house or manufactory, of which they desired to take part only, the company, proceeding under sect. 85, must make the deposit and deliver the bond, in respect of the whole, and not of that part only which they themselves desired to take. (Giles v. The London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, 1 Drew. & S. 407; Gibson v. The Hammersmith Railway Company, 9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 221; 11 Weekly Rep. 299).

In conclusion, the case of Willey v. The South-eastern Railway Company (1 Mac. & G. 58; 6 Railw. Cas. 100) calls for some additional comment. In that case, the company, dealing with a lessee for years, delivered a bond under this section, conditioned for payment to the lessee, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, or for deposit in the Bank of England, "as the case may require, for his or their benefit," &c., instead of "for the benefit of the parties interested in such lands, as the case may require, which are the words of the act." Lord Cottenham held the bond to be good, on the principle, that the company might, if they saw fit, deal with a party as being absolutely entitled to the interest which he claimed, and that they had done so in the present case. It may be observed that, although no doubt the company might after this decision deliver a bond in the form followed in this case, it is very doubtful whether this would be a judicious course to adopt. It is conceived, that if the landowner should turn out not to be absolutely entitled, the company, taking possession under a bond in this form, might be ejected by the persons entitled in remainder. It seems also clear that this case would be no authority whatever in favour of a company deliberately taking this course, when they knew, or had reason to suspect, that the party with whom they treated was not absolutely entitled.

CONCENTRATION OF THE COURTS.

It is understood that the two bills of the last session, called "The Courts of Justice Building Act" and "The Courts of Justice Money Act," will be reintroduced, and vigorously prosecuted, in the coming session. The scheme of the money bill is, that Parliament should grant a sum equal to the value of the property which will be surrendered, and rents which will cease to be payable, when the new courts are occupied, and that the balance, estimated to be considerably within a million sterling, shall be paid out of the Suitors' Fund in Chancery, and, if necessary, by the taxation of suitors to the Courts other than the Court of Chancery. A request that the benchers of the Inner Temple will express their opinion in favour of the measure is in course of signature, and has been already very numerous signed by members of the bar of that Inn; and a similar movement is in progress in the Middle Temple. We have not heard of any action on the part of Gray's Inn. As to Lincoln's Inn, the bar and the bench are not at one; the latter having determined to postpone the interests of the public and the bar to the paramount pecuniary interests of the Inn, as holders of chamber property. These sentiments are expressed in the following remarkable petition against the bill of the last session, signed by Mr. Walker, Q. C., on behalf of the benchers:—

"That a bill has been introduced into your honourable House to enable the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings to acquire a site for the erection and concentration of Courts of Justice, and of the various offices belonging to the same.

"That your petitioner objects only to so much of the said bill as will enable her Majesty's Government, or the Lord Chancellor, to remove the five courts of the Lord Chancellor, the Lords Justices, and the three Vice-Chancellors, from Lincoln's-inn, where they now are, to another site, to be purchased for that purpose; and your petitioner submits to your honourable House, that such removal is inexpedient, for the following reasons:—

"The convenience of the equity courts being in Lincoln's-inn, where most of the practitioners therein have chambers, and are members of this society, greatly preponderates over any real advantage of all the superior courts of law and equity being under one roof, as has been proved by the Lord Chancellor from time immemorial, and the Vice-Chancellors ever since the institution of that office above fifty years ago, and the Lords Justices since their institution in 1851, having always sat in Lincoln's-inn out of term time, and ever since the year 1853 in term time also, instead of sitting with the common-law courts in Westminster Hall.

"The Master of the Rolls has always sat at the Rolls House, in Chancery-lane, when the other equity judges have sat in Lincoln's-inn; and your petitioner understands, that the present Master of the Rolls objects to his court being removed to the site contemplated by the said bill.

"Whatever advantage there may be in the proximity of all the superior courts will be fully attained, and with less confusion and more convenience, by the equity courts not being in the same building with the common-law and other courts, but at a short distance therefrom, as will be the case if the equity courts are left in Lincoln's-inn while the other courts are built on the proposed site near Lincoln's-inn.

"This society has always hitherto provided courts for the Lord Chancellor and for the Lords Justices since their institution, without any cost to the public or any charge on the Chancery Suitors' Fund, except a small sum for interest on the cost of altering the old dining-hall of the society for that purpose, which the Lord Chancellor is authorised to pay out of the Suitors' Fund, by the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 52.

"These courts are convenient and sufficient, and it would be a mere waste of money to buy a site for and to build other courts instead within the distance of a quarter of a mile, as is proposed by the said bill.

"In 1816 this society granted a site in Lincoln's-inn for the court of the first Vice-Chancellor, then called the Vice-Chancellor of England, and his court was built thereon under the act 56 Geo. 3, c. 86.

"In 1841 the society built two more courts for the second and third Vice-Chancellors, at a cost of 4000*l.*, and the society has never received or asked for any rent or payment for the same.

"The two last-mentioned courts were only built by the society for temporary buildings, although they have now been used for twenty-two years, in consequence of no better courts being provided. Those courts, and also the first Vice-Chancellor's Court, are now inadequate and inconvenient for the business which has to be transacted by the Vice-Chancellors under the altered practice of the Court of Chancery.

"In the year 1859, the necessity for new Vice-Chancellor's Courts and chambers having become urgent, the means of providing the same were discussed between the then Lord Chancellor and the Vice-Chancellors and the Masters of the bench of this society; and it was found that a slight extension of the aforesaid act, the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, would be sufficient to enable the Lord Chancellor to guarantee a perpetual instead of a temporary rent for any buildings to be provided for the accommodation of the Court of Chancery; and the Masters of the bench undertook to spend a sum not exceeding 100,000*l.* in building such courts and chambers on a plan arranged with the Vice-Chancellors, and approved by the Lord Chancellor, on being guaranteed a rent equal to 4*l.* per cent. on the cost thereof.

"Accordingly, Lord Chelmsford, then Lord Chancellor, introduced a bill for that purpose, which was read a second time, and the plans of the proposed courts were laid before the House of Lords; but before any further proceedings therein the Parliament was dissolved, and soon afterwards a commission was issued to inquire into the subject of removing all the superior courts from Westminster Hall. The commissioners, in 1860, recommended such removal, and several bills have been since introduced for the purpose, which have always been opposed in Parliament on the ground of the great expense of such a scheme, which is estimated to cost one million and a-half of money; and objected to by your petitioner on grounds similar to those now stated; and such bills have all been rejected or abandoned.

"If the said bill of 1859 had been passed, the necessary courts for the three Vice-Chancellors would have been completed several years ago, and at an insignificant cost compared with the expense of building a complete set of new equity courts, as part of a grand scheme which will probably not be completed for many years.

"It appears by another bill, now introduced into your honourable House, that it is again proposed to apply a portion of the Chancery Suitors' Fund, or of moneys arising therefrom, to the building of new common-law courts, although it is apparent from returns made to Parliament, that there is barely enough of the Suitors' Fund, and moneys arising therefrom unappropriated, to pay interest on the cost of new Vice-Chancellors' Courts, even if built on the comparatively cheap plan proposed by your petitioner.

"Your petitioner, therefore, humbly submits to your honourable House that the courts of equity ought to be excepted from the said bill, and your petitioner hereby repeats the offer of the said society, to build on their own ground new courts and chambers for the three Vice-Chancellors, according to the said plan already laid before the House of Lords, or with any alterations thereof which may be approved by the Lord Chancellor, on being guaranteed out of the Suitors' Fund, or otherwise, either the actual cost thereof, or a perpetual rent for the same, at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. on such actual cost, including the loss of rent of any chambers which may be destroyed thereby.

"Your petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that the said bill may not pass into a law as it now stands, but that the same may be amended, by excluding the removal of the courts of equity therefrom, and by inserting a power similar to that contained in the said bill of 1859, to authorise the Lord Chancellor to order a perpetual rent to be paid out of the Suitors' Fund to the honourable Society of Lincoln's-inn for any improvement or alteration which they may make in the present Courts of Chancery in Lincoln's-inn, and for any new courts and chambers which they may build or provide for the judges of the Court of Chancery, with the approval of such judges and the Lord Chancellor, at a cost not exceeding a sum to be fixed in such bill, and that no appropriation of the Suitors' Fund may be made inconsistent with such power, or with the provisions of the said act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, under which the Suitors' Fund is already applicable to such purposes."

Thus it will be seen that the benchers of Lincoln's-inn object to the erection of buildings for the accommodation of all the courts of justice in the neighbourhood of Lincoln's-inn, on the following grounds:—

First, because it is more convenient that the chambers of equity counsel should be all round the equity courts than that they should be on one side of them, as is proved by the fact, that the equity judges sit in Lincoln's-inn, and not at Westminster.

Secondly, because—(a) the Master of the Rolls always sits in Chancery-lane; and—(b) Mr. Walker believes that Sir J. Romilly objects to the proposed site.

Thirdly, because the separation of the equity courts from the common-law courts by a little space is likely to prevent confusion [fusion?]

Fourthly, because the present equity courts (with the exception of the erection of one of the Vice-Chancellor's Courts) have been provided by the society almost gratis; and because the old Vice-Chancellor's Court and the two sheds which were erected in 1841 continue to be used for want of proper courts; and because the Government scheme will cost money.

Fifthly, because the benchers have a scheme for building equity courts on their own ground, and letting them to the public at a rent of 4l. per cent. on the cost, to be paid out of the Suitors' Fund.

Sixthly, because such courts might have been completed several years ago, whereas the courts contemplated by the bill could not be built for some years to come; and if built, would form part of a grand scheme, which cannot be said of the proposed Lincoln's-inn Courts.

Seventhly, because either scheme would absorb the whole of the Suitors' Fund.

We regret that we cannot supply the eighth and last argument, which by some accident has not found its way into the petition. It was founded, we believe, on an estimate of the fall of rents in Lincoln's-inn which would ensue upon the removal of the equity courts to a site on the other side of Carey-street.

On the other hand, the Incorporated Law Society presented a petition in favour of the bills, in which, after referring to Lord Chelmsford's bill of 1859, for carrying the Lincoln's-inn scheme into effect, they said:—

"That your petitioners strongly opposed the said bill on various grounds; amongst others, that whilst it would burthen the fund in question with a heavy annual charge, it would provide only a partial and utterly inadequate remedy for the great evils complained of; that the judges of the courts of equity ought to discharge their important duties in public buildings the property of the nation, and not in buildings held at the pleasure of a private society, however honourable or dignified. And above all, that if the plan of the benchers of Lincoln's-inn were carried into effect, it would perpetuate the separation of the courts of equity from the other courts, and for ever prevent that concentration which the concurrent testimony of all competent witnesses had declared to be the only effectual remedy for the existing evils.

"That communications thereupon took place between your petitioners and various members of the then Government, and particularly the then First Lord of the Treasury (the Earl of Derby), the Lord Chancellor (Lord Chelmsford), and the Chief Commissioner of Public Works and Buildings (the Lord John Manners), the result of which was, that the Government withdrew the bill for carrying into effect the Lincoln's-inn scheme, and undertook to advise the Crown to appoint a commission, by whom the whole subject should be thoroughly investigated.

"That accordingly, the Royal Commission to which your petitioners have already referred was issued in the year 1859, under the advice of the then ministers of the Crown, for the purpose of inquiring into the expediency of the concentration of all the superior courts, both of law and equity, with their respective offices, into one place or neighbourhood, for the selection of a site or sites, and for the suggestion of the pecuniary means for procuring such site or sites, and for erecting suitable buildings thereon.

"That the commissioners examined numerous witnesses of the highest character, and possessed of the best means of giving correct and reliable information and opinions on the subjects thus referred to them. They availed themselves of the inquiries which had been already made under parliamentary authority, or otherwise, on the same or closely connected subjects; they were also supplied with the returns from different offices, and upon some parts of the inquiry the commissioners had all of them, in a greater or less degree, the benefit of much personal experience, and were thereby enabled more correctly to appreciate the evidence and information derived from other sources.

"That the commissioners made special and minute inquiry into the scheme which, as above stated, had been suggested by the honourable Society of Lincoln's-inn, and which had formed the subject of the Lord Chancellor's bill. The plans of the society were laid before them, and the then treasurer of the society, as well as other witnesses, were examined by them in explanation thereof, and in the support of the society's views.

"That the commissioners made their report in the year 1860, and therein, amongst other things, stated that, upon the desirableness of such a concentration as was described in the commission, they had had no division of opinion, or difficulty in arriving at a conclusion—the evidence of witnesses, entitled to the greatest consideration personally, and from their means of acquiring knowledge on the subject, being all one way. They further stated, that they desired to make the concentration which they recommended as comprehensive as possible, as much of its advantage depended on its completeness; and that, in such concentration, they included not merely that of courts with courts, but of courts with their offices. They pointed out, that if court be separated from court, and courts be at a distance from their offices, if these last be separated from each other, and if both be at a distance from the chambers of barristers and the offices of attorneys and solicitors, it is obvious that time must be lost in the transaction of business, in every stage of it, and by every one concerned in it. And they added, that it was difficult to convey in statement an adequate idea of the daily mischief which results from the scanty and inconvenient accommodation which the courts at present afford for the great object of the central administration of justice; how much fatigue, bodily ailment, and dissatisfaction are created by it; how much the course of business is delayed, impeded, and diverted by it; and how, in a great number of ways, it is rendered more costly.

"The commissioners further reported, with reference to the Lincoln's-inn scheme, that it was not a temporary one, nor could it be carried into effect, except by a very large outlay of money; that it was founded on the principle of making permanent the present separation of the equity courts from those of common law, and all other branches of the administration of justice. That it was, therefore, inconsistent with the recommendations they thought it their duty to make; and not only so, but it would, if carried into effect, certainly postpone for an indefinite period, if not practically extinguish, all hope of the general concentration to which they attached so much importance.

"Finally, the commissioners recommended as the site for the proposed concentration, the identical site which it is the object of the first of the two bills now before your honourable House to enable the Crown to acquire, in favour of which they stated, that they had the concurrent testimony of witnesses from every branch of the profession.

"That the commissioners, one of whom was one of the present Vice-Chancellors, were unanimous in their opinions and recommendations.

"That if the new courts of equity be built on the northern side of the proposed site, such courts when built will, in the majority of cases, be as near to, in some actually nearer, and in none more than a few yards further distant from, the chambers of the barristers practising therein, than the existing courts.

"That to exclude the courts of equity from the scheme proposed by the bills now before your honourable House, as proposed by the Society of Lincoln's-inn, would, in the judgment and belief of your petitioners, be, to sacrifice the general interests and convenience of the suitors and the public, to the personal interests of a few individuals, and to the supposed dignity and importance of that society.

"That your petitioners firmly believe that the funds proposed to be dealt with by the second of the said bills, are legally and adequately available for the purpose, and will be found amply sufficient, under the arrangements contemplated by the same bill, to effect the object desired, without imposing any burthen on the public.

"Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that the same bills may pass into law in their present form, and especially that no alteration may be made therein for the purpose of excluding the courts of equity from the operation thereof."

LIBEL.

[Queen's Bench Sittings at Westminster, before Cockburn, C. J., and a Special Jury.]

BLAKE v. STEVENS and Others.

This was an action by an attorney against Messrs. Stevens, Sons, & Haynes, law publishers, for a libel upon him in his character as an attorney, contained in Pulling's Law and Practice of Attorneys. The passages complained of were the following:—

"If an attorney or solicitor be guilty of a criminal offence, or other gross misconduct, the Court of which he is an officer will interfere, with the view to determine whether the misconduct has disqualified him from any longer continuing as such officer; and, on a gross case being proved, will peremptorily order the name of the defaulter to be struck off the rolls; and this summary jurisdiction will be exercised in a clear case, whether the offence was committed when acting in a professional capacity or not."

To which there was a note—"See Re Blake (30 L. J., Q. B., 323)." And then, at a subsequent page:—

"The power to remove from the rolls the name of an attorney who has misconducted himself, is simply the power of the Court over one of its officers, shewn to be no longer worthy to be trusted."

To which there is this reference:—

"See Re Blake (30 L. J., Q. B., 323), where the attorney, having borrowed money of a person, not then his client, on deposit of a mortgage deed, and afterwards got it back, and, without the lender's consent, received the money and appropriated it, the Court ordered him to be struck off the rolls."

This was a mistake; he had only been suspended for two years; and the error was afterwards corrected by a cancellation of the page, and substitution of a new page containing the correction. However, in August last, before the error had been observed, the plaintiff's attorneys wrote to the publishers to the effect, that he had instructed them to proceed against the publishers, and desiring the name of their attorneys, which was accordingly supplied, and the mistake was at once corrected, as above stated; but this action was brought.

Lush, Q. C., and Henry James, for the plaintiff.

Bovill, Q. C., and Rew, for the defendants.

Lush, Q. C., said, as the libellous passage was published in a work of great learning and authority, it was calculated to do all the greater injury. It was quite true that the plaintiff, who was an attorney of forty years' standing, was two or three years ago suspended for two years; but that was quite a different thing from being struck off the rolls, and was a sentence of a much milder character. He had re-entered practice, and regained the respect and confidence of his clients; and this libel was calculated to destroy his character, and ruin him in his profession, which he had a right to practise after the expiration of the period of his suspension.

COCKBURN, C. J.—As it was a mere mistake, and has been corrected, need the case go further? You see, Mr. Lush, your client's attorneys asked no correction, but at once asked for the names of attorneys, in order to institute proceedings.

Lush said his client had not been informed of the correction until now; and it was really necessary for him to bring the action, in order to vindicate his character.

The publication of the libel having been proved, the plaintiff was called, and stated that he was in practice, with the exception alluded to, ever since 1821. After his suspension he had, in November, 1862, resumed practice at Putney, and had since remained in practice. It was elicited that there were others named "Blake" in the profession; but it did not appear that there was any other person of that name and the same Christian name (Francis), nor that any one else of that name had been struck off the rolls or suspended.

The report in the Law Journal was by consent put in as evidence, instead of the formal record of the proceedings. The report of the case, which set forth the Master's report at length, was rather long. The marginal note is as follows:—

"Where an attorney of the court has been guilty of gross misconduct, the Court will interfere summarily, although the misconduct does not amount to an indictable offence, and arose in a transaction, in which the attorney was not acting in that character."

"B. having previously known an attorney, and employed him as an attorney, informed him that he had some money to invest, on which the attorney himself borrowed it on the security of his promissory note, and the deposit of a mortgage deed of an estate in Ireland, on which he had advanced a larger sum. The estate coming into the Encumbered Estates Court, the attorney borrowed the deed of B., in order, as he informed B., to substantiate his claim on the estate; he afterwards returned the deed, but by this temporary possession of it he was enabled to receive the whole of his advance, which he accordingly received, and appropriated the whole to his own purposes. He told B. nothing of the matter, but went on for several years paying him interest on his loan. The attorney afterwards became insolvent, and B. lost the whole of his principal. On these facts the Court suspended the attorney from practising for two years."

The judgment of the Court contained the following observations:—

"When an attorney is shewn to be guilty of a gross fraud, though it may not have been such a fraud as to render him liable to criminal proceedings, and though the fraud was not committed by him while the relation of attorney and client was subsisting, yet still in such a case, where one who is an officer of the court has been guilty of gross fraud and dishonesty, we are called upon for the protection of suitors and others, who would give credit to him as an attorney, to visit such misconduct with summary punishment. Upon this principle the present attorney must be held responsible, for circumstances of a gross fraud have been proved against him. . . . It has been urged as matter of extenuation, that Blake at the time he borrowed the deed and obtained the money, was in a position to repay Beeviss at any time, and he may possibly have really so intended, but this kind of statement we have constantly made in cases of embezzlement.

"These are the facts of the case, and the delinquent attorney must be visited by some punishment adequate to the offence; and though the Court will not proceed to extremities and strike him off the rolls, his certificate must be suspended for two years."

It is to be observed, that the passage in Mr. Serjeant Pulling's book does not mention the Christian name of the attorney, and it only appeared from the report in the Law Journal that he was Francis Blake the plaintiff.

Bovill called no witnesses, and in addressing the jury on behalf of the defendants, read the above passages from the report of the case in the Law Journal, and contended that the facts of the case were correctly stated in the passage complained of; and the only error was in the extent of the punishment.

COCKBURN, C. J.—The first passage, I am clearly of opinion, is not actionable; nor would the second passage be so but for the unfortunate mistake made. The proposition of law is correctly stated; and if there had been a mere reference to the case, and, perhaps, even if there had been only a summary of it, it would have been privileged, but then there is unfortunately this mistake.

Bovill contended, that it was a mistake of no real or substantial consequence to the plaintiff, because the injury would be in the imputation upon his character, and that would consist in the conviction for a "gross fraud," and the mere extent of the punishment would not affect the merits of the case, nor enhance the injury arising from the imputation. The imputation was quite true as regarded the nature and quality of the offence; and if the statement had been that the plaintiff "might" have been struck off the rolls, it would have been strictly correct. There was the mere mistake that he had been struck off the rolls instead of being suspended for two years. But then it was accompanied by a reference to the report, from which it would appear that he had been suspended; and it was only in the report that it would appear that it was the plaintiff who was referred to in the libel. Now, no one but a lawyer would be likely to read the learned work of Mr. Serjeant Pulling; and any one who was a lawyer would refer to the report, and see the exact truth. The matter was really one of very great and general importance to public writers and publishers. It was clear law that reports of cases in courts of law were privileged; and surely the citation was equally privileged, otherwise the mere reading of a report out loud would be a libel, and so the mere handing a published report to another person. The principle was, that defamatory matter was not actionable without malice; and although prima facie the publication of defamatory matter was evidence of malice, yet that presumption was rebutted if it was published upon an occasion of a real or supposed duty or interest. If on such an occasion a mistake was honestly made, without malice, there was no liability to action. As in the case of a master giving a servant a bad character, for which he was not liable, even although it was a false character, unless it was maliciously or recklessly false. The law of privileged publication was based upon a similar principle; and it would, indeed, be unfortunate if public writers had not the same degree and measure of protection as all persons in private matters. If the occasion of publication was privileged, there was no action without malice.

COCKBURN, C. J.—If the publication is unfair, it will not be privileged.

Bovill.—If the jury are satisfied of malice; but the unfairness is only evidence of malice.

Lush.—There is legal malice if it is unfair.

Bovill.—Not unless it is so unfair as to be malicious.

COCKBURN, C. J.—If it is unfair and injures another it is actionable. The question I shall leave to the jury is, whether it was unfair.

Bovill.—And not whether it was malicious?

COCKBURN, C. J.—I assume that it was not malicious in fact, but in law; I will, however, reserve the question of law; it is one of very great importance, not, perhaps, in this particular case, but as a general question, and I will do anything to put it in a train for solemn decision. There is no suggestion, of course, that the learned author of this work had any intention of injuring the plaintiff. On the other hand, you cannot contend that the statement was "fair." No doubt it was intended to be fair, and was a mere mistake. But it is a misstatement to say that a man who has been suspended has been struck off the rolls.

Lush.—We say there was legal malice, as the statement was unfair.

Bovill.—There was no damage and no real libel. If a man who had stolen a sovereign was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for a month, would it be a libel to say he had been sentenced to two months' imprisonment? Or if a man who had been convicted of burglary and had been sentenced to transportation for fourteen years, was said to have been sentenced for life? The fact that the plaintiff had been convicted of a gross fraud was not disputed, and what did it matter for what period the plaintiff had been suspended, for two years or for life?

COCKBURN, C. J., summed up the case to the jury.—"This action," he said, "has been most unfortunately brought, and as unfortunately defended. It is clear that a most serious mistake has been made, and it is unfortunate that an action should have been brought without asking for its correction. On the other hand, it is equally unfortunate that the action should have been defended without saying, 'It has been corrected.' The more important question, however, is, whether this is libellous. That is a question partly of law and partly of fact. If the occasion of publication is privileged, and what is to be found in the book is a fair statement of what is to be found in the report, then it is not libellous. Gentlemen, in the present state of our law, when, unfortunately, we have no code of laws nor consolidation of statutes, a great portion of our law is to be found only in decisions of courts of justice; and those decisions would very speedily fade from recollection if they were not recorded in the shape of authentic reports, which can be referred to. And as, unfortunately, the reports, which contain the various decisions of our numerous courts, are only to be found scattered over hundreds and hundreds of volumes, if it were not for the assistance of text-writers, who from time to time give a summary of the decisions which have been pronounced, and arrange them in such a way, that by that means they can be ascertained and studied, I do not know where we should find ourselves; our law would be a chaos of confusion. It is bad enough as it is, but would be a thousand times worse if it were not for the labours of those who report in our courts, and those who afterwards embody in their works the united labours of the bar and the bench. It is, therefore, most important that reports of proceedings in courts of justice should be published, and it is of equal importance that those who embody the substance of these reports in the shape of scientific treatises, should be privileged when they fairly and honestly exercise the functions of legal writers. And if, therefore, a learned writer, in expounding a certain branch of the law, refers to reported cases faithfully and fairly, then, although they may be derogatory or defamatory to individuals mentioned in them, the writer is not liable to action. And if, therefore, in the present instance, the plaintiff, who has had the misfortune to fall into this 'scrape,' has no more to complain of than that his case was referred to as illustrating the legal proposition that an attorney guilty of misconduct might be struck off the rolls, as that is certainly laid down in the case, he would have had no cause of action. The learned writer would have referred to the report, where the facts are truly stated, and he would have been privileged. But, unfortunately, the passage goes beyond the facts of the report, and it states as a fact that he was struck off the rolls, when, in truth, he was only suspended. Now, there is a great difference between these cases. This was the case of a man who was suspended for two years, because unfaithful to his trust as to money he had received, and ought to have handed over to his client, but unfortunately applied to his own use, with the intention, at the time (as I understood, and stated in my judgment on the case), to repay the money (an intention which many a man has who is afterwards called upon to answer for the misappropriation of funds), but which intention he was unfortunately unable to carry out. That was the case before us, and upon which we pronounced our judgment, that he should be suspended for two years. But it is a very different thing to say that he was struck off the rolls. We did not think the case was one which called for so serious a punishment. It is, therefore, most unfortunate that such a misstatement should have been made; and if it had been at once acknowledged as a mistake, it would have been far better than to fling in the teeth of the plaintiff these unfortunate proceedings, of which he has already paid the penalty. That, however, does not affect the question we have to decide, which is, whether this is a fair statement of the facts. No one supposes that Mr. Serjeant Pulling had any desire to injure the plaintiff. But then comes the important question, whether, although the publication is so far privileged, that if you make a fair and honest representation of the facts, however it may affect the character of the person of whom you are speaking, you are relieved from legal liability—you are not called upon to take care to use reasonable care and diligence in order to be correct. That seems the common sense of the matter, though I do not wish to interfere with your judgment by laying down any doctrine of law. All I intend to submit to you (reserving the question of law) is, whether this statement, being that the plaintiff was struck off the rolls, and the report referred to being that he was only suspended, that was a statement reasonably fair of that which is contained in the report? We must take it that it was a mistake. Did it arise from want of reasonable diligence and care? There is the prior question, indeed, whether the passage is libellous. There can be no doubt that it is libellous to say that an attorney has been struck off the rolls. It is said, that the passage complained of refers to the report which states the facts correctly. But every one would not take the trouble to refer to and read the report. It is urged, that it does not appear, but from the report, that it is the plaintiff who is referred to; but that is for you to say. Then, if you think that the passage is libellous on the plaintiff, and also that it is not a fair statement of the report, then comes the question of damages; as to which, it being beyond all doubt a mere mistake, and the case being referred to as one which undoubtedly does illustrate the proposition of law for which it is cited, viz. that an attorney may be struck off the rolls for misconduct, it would not have been a case for serious damages, if it were not for the way in which the action has been defended; not merely urging that it was a mistake, but bringing up against the plaintiff the misconduct for which he has already suffered. That is not the way in which parties who are in the wrong should defend themselves; and you may consider all the circumstances in your estimate of the damages." In conclusion, the Court left the following questions to the jury:—First, does the passage refer to the plaintiff? Secondly, is it libellous? Thirdly, is it a fair representation of the report? If you find the first two questions for the plaintiff, assess the damages conditionally; but also find the third question specially, with a view to the question of law reserved.

The jury found that the passage referred to the plaintiff, and was libellous; and that it was not a fair representation of the report; and assessed the damages for the plaintiff at 100*l*.

COCKBURN, C. J.—That is, subject to the point of law reserved for the Court.

[It is not easy to see what point of law was reserved. The only substantial question in the case was, whether an erroneous statement of the punishment inflicted on a person, who could not be identified without referring to the report which would correct the error, involved any appreciable damage.—ED.]

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (consisting, for the present, of the Lords Justices Knight Bruce and Turner, Sir Lawrence Peel, Sir Edward Ryan, and Sir James Colville) is still engaged in the hearing of appeals from India and the eastern dependencies. The hearing of the petition of the Bishop of Natal (Dr. Colenso), which was fixed for Monday next, the 12th inst., is deferred till Wednesday, the 14th.

HEAVY RAILWAY COMPENSATION CLAIM.—On Wednesday last, at the Sheriff's Court, Red Lion-square, a remarkable compensation case, Searly v. The Tottenham and Hampstead Railway Company, engaged a special jury, under the presidency of Mr. Under-sheriff Burchell, till nearly six o'clock. Mr. Hawkins, Q. C., with Mr. Robinson, was for the claimants, the executors of Mr. Searly; and Mr. Lloyd, with whom was Mr. Mellor, for the company. The claim was nearly 14,000*l*. for land taken, and for the depreciation of the other portion in the Junction-road, between Kentish Town and Holloway. For the land, about 3000*l*. was asked, and for the damage to the rest, 10,500*l*. Ten acres had been taken of the corporation of the Sons of the Clergy, and buildings planned. The railway would interfere with the plan, and the damage estimated at upwards of 10,000*l*. On the part of the company, the land was estimated at about 1000*l*., and the damage at 500*l*. Mr. Fuller, the surveyor to the property, was of opinion, that the proposed embankment and station on the estate would enhance the value of the property. Mr. Undersheriff Burchell told the jury that the case was an important one, and the discrepancy in the evidence was such as he had never heard before. The value of the land by the claimants was just under 4000*l*., and by the company just over 1000*l*. But the remarkable circumstance was the supposed damage by the railway. On one side 10,500*l*. was claimed, and on the part of the company it was stated, that the works would increase the value. The jury awarded 1200*l*. for the land, and 1500*l*. for the damage, making 2700*l*.

JUSTICES' JUSTICE.—At the Spalding sessions last week, before the Rev. Edward Moore, chairman, and Mr. A. Howard, Mr. Thomas Parker, farmer, Whaplode, charged Francis Revell, aged sixty-two, with stealing a handful of wheat-ears from his field whilst the corn was in stock. It appeared that Sergeant Woods had observed the prisoner in the prosecutor's field picking up some corn, and he also took some out of a stock. The prisoner said he was merely picking up a few stray ears which had been passed over by the scythe. The corn, which was produced, was a handful of peculiar horned wheat. Revell is a man of respectable appearance, and has resided in the locality thirty-two years. Respectable witnesses came forward to say, that they had never heard any ill account of him before, and believed him to be an honest man. Convicted—ten days' imprisonment.—Lincolnshire Guardian.

DEATH OF JUDGE ELGEE.—We regret to have to announce the death of the Hon. Judge Elgee, which took place suddenly, from disease of the heart, on the 7th October last, at New Orleans. Judge Elgee was grandson of the late Archdeacon Elgee, of Wexford, and the only brother of Lady Wilde. Having settled many years ago in the Southern States, he rapidly acquired by his talents, and legal acumen, and great eloquence, a distinguished position at the American bar, and eventually rose to the bench. He had, however, retired from the practice of his profession, and at the time of the breaking out of the war was one of the wealthiest men in Louisiana. Only a year prior to that period he had invested 100,000*l*. in the purchase of an estate, the largest purchase ever made in Louisiana by a single individual. This plantation he called "Leinster;" for though so long and so far separated from his country, Judge Elgee never forgot his fatherland; and wherever a statue was to be erected, or a subscription for some good cause was set on foot, in Ireland, his generous aid was never wanting. Judge Elgee leaves an only son, who, before the war, was secretary of legation at Mexico, and is now aide de camp to General Lee.—Wexford Constitution.

NINE-TENTHS of the Total Profits are divided among the Assured. Considerably more than one-tenth of the Profits is derived from Policies which do not participate in the Profits, so that THE ASSURED HAVE LARGER BONUSES THAN IF THEY FORMED A MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY, and received the whole of the Profits derived from their own Policies.

The last BONUS averaged about SIXTY PER CENT. on the Premiums paid, and TWO PER CENT. PER ANNUM on the Sums assured.

THE EXPENSES of Management are less than FIVE PER CENT. on the Income.

THE PREMIUMS are calculated for every half-year of age.

The Policies of this Society, in the hands of third parties, are not vitiated by SUICIDE, or by the Life assured proceeding beyond the limits allowed.

NOTICES of ASSIGNMENT of Policies registered and acknowledged free of charge. Printed Forms for such Notices furnished when required.

The usual Commission allowed to Solicitors introducing Insurances, the Commission being continued to the person originally entitled to it as long as the Policy remains in force, through whatever channel the Premium may be paid.

LOANS granted on the Society's Policies, on Reversions, Life Interests, and other approved Security.

The Annual Reports and full Statements of Account are regularly printed, and may be obtained on application.

INDISPUTABLE LIFE ASSURANCE.

"The essential feature of an Indisputable Policy is, that it is granted on one condition, that the person assured 'is now living.' Such is the form of expression devised by that astute of lawyers the present Lord Chancellor, to exclude all questions of fraud or misrepresentations. The Society (the Indisputable Life Assurance) appears to act on this principle; and we are glad to learn that their financial condition is such as we should have anticipated from the carrying on of their business on what are obviously sound as well as equitable principles."—JOURNAL OF JURISPRUDENCE, December, 1864.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 17, 1864.

A STARTLING novelty has been just propounded by Vice-Chancellor Wood, to which we desire to draw the earnest attention of such of our readers as are engaged in, or concerned with, joint-stock enterprises, and particularly those undertakings in which the liability is supposed by law to be limited. We allude to the learned Vice-Chancellor's decision in the case of Betts v. De Vire and Others (5 N. R. 165), to the effect, that the directors of a limited liability company are personally liable for the costs of a suit instituted by a patentee to restrain the infringement of his patent by the company. The charge in the bill against these directors was, that they had from time to time personally interfered in carrying on the affairs of the said company, and in the infringement of the letters-patent of the plaintiff, and had from time to time superintended and given directions to workmen and others employed in the manufactory of the said company for the making and manufacturing a metallic material substantially in the manner pointed out in the plaintiff's said specification; and the Vice-Chancellor is reported to have said that the directors, in what they had done, had acted with their eyes open, and that the fact of their having been agents of the company did not relieve them from the responsibility attending their conduct, and that they were personally liable to pay the costs of the suit.

We apprehend that this is a very novel doctrine. The Vice-Chancellor admits that the directors in their conduct were the agents of the company, and, therefore, the vexatious questions of excess of authority, and of the impossibility of agency for the purposes of fraud, do not arise. But it may, by the way, be observed, that in this case there could not have existed the smallest doubt as to the directors having acted within the limits of their authority; inasmuch as the company, of which they were directors, was expressly formed to work the patent (Winshurst's patent for metal foil and sheet-metal), the working of which constituted the infringement of Betts's patent; so that the very scope and aim of the association, of which the defendants were the managers, was to commit the alleged wrong of which the plaintiff (Mr. Betts) complained. Nor can it be for an instant, under these circumstances, contended, that the infringement of this patent was a fraud, within the meaning of the much-doubted axiom in Dodgson's case (3 De G. & S. 85), "that directors cannot be the agents of a body of shareholders to commit a fraud;" for even if the infringement of a patent were a fraudulent act, there was here clear authority to the directors to infringe; and all that they did, or were accused of doing, was, to carry out the affairs of their own company. If, therefore, this had been an ordinary joint-stock company, the question would have been, whether directors, acting within the scope of their authority, were personally liable for a tort committed by the company in the prosecution of the objects of their incorporation. That the company itself would in such a case have been liable appears very clearly from the cases of Hills v. The Liverpool United Gas-light Company (9 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 140) and Green v. The London General Omnibus Company (7 C. B., N. S., 302). The costs of this suit would be a debt of the company, and to make the directors individually liable for such a debt is directly contrary to the known law of corporations, and also directly at variance with the express provisions of the 3rd section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 14 (the Joint-stock Companies Amendment Act); the 6th section of the 22 Vict. c. 60; and the 48th section of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89. But, in this case, the position of these directors is still stronger. Their company is not only a company duly registered and incorporated, and one, therefore, whose corporate funds only are in the first instance liable to creditors' demands, but it is also a company with limited liability. Now, according to the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 38, "in the case of a company limited by shares, no contribution shall be required from any member exceeding the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares in respect of which he is liable as a present or past member." And yet, in the face of this enactment, the Vice-Chancellor has held the directors of this limited company individually and personally liable for the whole costs of this suit. It is true, that in this suit the bill prayed a discovery as well as an injunction, and that, therefore, in accordance with the common Chancery practice in bills of that nature, the directors were individually made defendants to the suit, as well as the corporate body of which they were the agents and managers; but it will hardly be contended, that this solitary fact conferred on the Vice-Chancellor the jurisdiction he has assumed.

On the contrary, on the principle of "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius," the 69th section of the Companies Act, 1862, which provides, that in actions or suits brought by limited companies, security for costs may be required and ordered, where there is reason to suppose that the assets of the company will be insufficient to pay their opponents costs in case of his success, seems to shew that the Legislature were not similarly disposed to aid plaintiffs in actions or suits brought against such companies, and militates forcibly against the Vice-Chancellor's holding.

It should be further remembered, that the extent of the personal liability of directors is defined by the statute of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89. Any director acting in contravention of the 25th section, will incur the penalty of 5*l.* a day, and similar penalties are imposed under the 27th, 32nd, 34th, 42nd, 43rd, 44th, 46th, 53rd, and 54th sections, for offences by directors against the respective provisions of those sections; whilst by the 42nd section, directors are made personally liable for the amounts of any bill, note, or cheque issued in an unauthorised form; and a little liability ensues to the directors equally with private members under the 48th section, if the business of the company is attempted to be carried on by less than seven members. The decision of the Vice-Chancellor has, however, added a new section to the statute; and, under the circumstances, we are not surprised to learn that these directors have already given notice of appeal to a higher tribunal.

We have received from Dr. De Meschin a long and learned vindication of his proposition (ante, p. 454)—that “every decree and judgment, even though unrecorded and entirely forgotten, has the force and effect of law, and is binding on the whole nation”—which we regret that we cannot insert at length. It will probably satisfy our correspondent—as it will us—to give from his letter the following explanation at once of the proposition, and of the reference to Lord St. Leonards.

“I quoted Lord St. Leonards, not as an authority, but as a signal example. What are the facts? This eminent peer tells us, that in writing the ‘Law of Property as administered by the House of Lords,’ 1849, ‘he had at his command some materials which greatly aided him. Whilst at the bar he retained all the printed cases in appeals in which he was counsel, with his own notes and the notes of the arguments. From this source principally he has been enabled to add to the cases not at present reported between 1821 and 1826. Where a case which he argued is not reported elsewhere, or the reports of it do not state by whom it was argued, the fact that he was one of the counsel is mentioned, as an intimation that the writer possessed means of knowledge beyond the mere printed case, and besides the report.’

“(Parenthetically, I may remark, that reports of the last tribunal resort, which need such supplementing, are open to the greatest censure).

“But to return, does not this bear out my ‘remarkable proposition?’ Here, we have decisions of the highest Court ‘unrecorded and entirely forgotten’ for quarter of a century, and then awaking from their long sleep to work (as far as they were operative) the worst of revolutions—a revolution of property; and so long as each decision is not recorded in some such way as I have proposed, this must constantly occur.”

AMENDMENT OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE.

THE following paper was read before the Jurisprudence Department of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, on the 21st November, 1864, by Alfred Waddilove, D.C.L., “On the Amendment of the Law of Evidence, in order to admit the Testimony of Parties in all Civil Suits, and of Defendants in Criminal Trials.”— “Amid the many improvements in the administration of justice during the last thirty years, none has tended more towards truthful and impartial decision than the removal of restraint upon testimony. ‘Evidence is the basis of justice; to exclude evidence is to exclude justice.’ So wrote that eccentric but truly philosophical inquirer, Jeremy Bentham—a zealous law reformer in days when reform, whether legal or political, was viewed in a very different light to that in which it is regarded now.

“The admission and exclusion of evidence are questions which concern not only those who study and practice law, but they affect the interests of the whole community; our property, our liberties, and our lives may be involved in the result. It is, then, with no apology that I ask this department to consider whether some of the restraints which still circumscribe the reception of evidence should not be at once removed.

“According to Mr. Pitt Taylor, in his valuable Treatise on Evidence, there are seven classes of persons still incompetent to give evidence:—First, parties to any suit in consequence of adultery; secondly, parties to any action for breach of promise of marriage; thirdly, persons charged with an indictable offence, or any offence punishable on summary conviction, as to their giving evidence on oath for or against themselves; fourthly, husbands and wives of all persons who are defendants in any criminal proceeding; fifthly, the wives of supposed paramours who are made co-respondents in suits for dissolution of marriage, or for damages by reason of adultery; sixthly, in cases of high treason and misprision of treason (other than such as consists in injuring or attempting to injure the Queen’s person), those persons who are not included in the list delivered to the defendant pursuant to statute; and, lastly, persons insensible to the obligation of an oath. All these restraints I would remove, save the two last. The propositions, then, that I would advance for consideration are four.

“1. That persons charged with a criminal offence should, on their trial, be permitted, if they think fit, to tender their own evidence, on oath, in order to clear themselves of the charge against them, subject to their cross-examination.

“2. That husbands and wives should be competent and compellable to give evidence for or against each other, in criminal as well as in civil cases.

“3. That all parties, including husbands and wives, to a suit of whatever nature, should be competent and compellable to give evidence bearing on the issue, for or against each other.

“4. That judges should be empowered to summon before them any person to give evidence they may think necessary, whether in a civil case or criminal trial; and that they may be empowered to adjourn the hearing of the case for that purpose. But before I touch upon each of these special considerations, I will in a few words trace our gradual progress towards our present improved state of the law of evidence; our old rules of evidence were purely judge-made law.

“The main grounds of exclusion were interest and crime. It was thought that if a person had a pecuniary interest in the result of a trial, his evidence was not trustworthy: and here allow me to mention an incident connected with this question of interest. A witness was produced in a civil trial; he was asked by the adverse counsel whether he would not benefit by a verdict in favour of the party whose witness he was; he replied that he should, to the extent of 10*l*. That, as the law then stood, rendered his evidence inadmissible. The counsel on the other side (Sir William Follett, I think) took from his pocket a 10*l*. note, and handed it to the witness, saying, ‘Now you have no interest.’ He was then allowed to give his evidence. The exclusion on the ground of improbity (the word is Bentham’s, and seems to me to convey the best idea of the law’s intention), want of honesty, implied a want of truth. Thus, if any person had been convicted of a crime, he was treated as not trustworthy, but only so long as he was undergoing his sentence. Thus, a prisoner was not to be believed when suffering punishment for his offence; but when the term of his punishment had expired, he was deemed capable of speaking the truth.

“It was not until the year 1833 that any attempt was made by our Legislature to control the admission or exclusion of evidence. Up to that time, the rules of evidence were for the most part based on the dicta of the judges, frequently of a very unsatisfactory kind; and although many of them in more recent times, and chief among them Lord Mansfield, saw and expatiated on the failure of justice from the rejection of evidence, and although he did much towards introducing more rational rules, so that, as Lord Campbell writes of him, ‘he found the law of evidence of brick, and left it of marble,' still, so averse were our judges and lawyers to legal reform, that they were content to witness the evil without an effort to remedy it. 'Stare super antiquas vias,' was their motto. The act passed in that year 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), intitled 'An Act for the further Amendment of the Law, and the better Advancement of Justice,' provided, that in order to render the rejection of witnesses on the ground of interest less frequent, if any witness were objected to as incompetent, he should, nevertheless, be examined under certain conditions. As that act was virtually superseded by that known as Lord Denman's (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), passed on the 22nd August, 1843, I pass over those conditions, and at once cite the important declaration of this later act, viz. 'That no person offered as a witness shall be hereafter excluded, by reason of incapacity from crime or interest, from giving evidence either in person or by deposition;' and it continued, 'that notwithstanding such person may have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of any issue, matter, question, or inquiry, or may have been previously convicted of any crime or offence, he should still be an admissible witness.' The act, however, expressly excluded the parties to a suit, together with the husband or wife of such party. When, however, three years afterwards, the County Court Act was passed, parties to suits in those courts, together with their husbands, wives, and all other persons, were rendered competent witnesses, no evils were found to arise from these concessions; the much dreaded perjury was not found to be more rife than under the old exclusive system; but it was not until a probation of six years that the Legislature was induced by our president, Lord Brougham, to extend the privilege conceded to the county courts to all other civil tribunals. Lord Brougham, in 1851, introduced a bill, which subsequently passed into an act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), whereby parties to suits, and the persons in whose behalf any suit or action was brought, were rendered competent and compellable to give evidence therein. That act, however, contained those exclusions of evidence which have induced me to draw your attention to them:—"No person who in any criminal proceeding is charged with the commission of any indictable offence, or any offence punishable on summary conviction, was to be competent or compellable to give evidence for or against himself; nor were husband or wife in any criminal proceeding to be competent or compellable to give evidence for or against each other; nor were the parties in any suit instituted in consequence of adultery, or in any action for breach of promise of marriage, to be admitted as witnesses therein." In 1853, Lord Brougham again induced the Legislature to widen the law of evidence as left by the act of 1851. By the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, the exclusion of the evidence of husband and wife, when opposed to each other, was abolished as far as civil proceedings were concerned; but in criminal proceedings, and in any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, they were still declared to be neither competent nor compellable to give evidence. Thus, the law of evidence now stands in these particulars, and thus it is now administered in our courts. The changes that have taken place are admitted by all to be improvements, and I would ask whether the further relaxations I have suggested should not be carried out.

"To begin, then, with my first proposition: 'That persons charged with a criminal offence should, on their trial, be permitted, if they think fit, to give their own evidence, on oath, to clear themselves of the charge against them, subject to cross-examination.' I am aware that this is no novel proposition. It has already been brought before this society on two occasions. A paper was read at the social science meeting in Glasgow, in 1860, by Mr. Pitt Taylor, the learned author of that work on evidence which is deservedly treated as the standing authority on the subject, 'on the expediency of passing an act to admit defendants in criminal courts, and their wives and husbands, to testify on oath.' In that paper he strongly urged the justice and policy of so doing, and combated the arguments of those opposed to the change. Another paper was read, 'on the propriety of admitting the evidence of accused persons on their trial,' by Mr. Mackenna, of the Irish bar, at the Dublin meeting in 1861. He expressed himself adverse to the propriety of so doing. His chief objection was, that it would tend to the prejudice of a prisoner if he tendered his evidence, that he might under cross-examination betray himself; and that it were better he should be compelled to remain silent. It is, however, satisfactory to find, that in the discussion which followed that view was not generally adopted. Under the present rule, which precludes a person charged with a criminal offence from being heard on his oath in his defence, a flagrant injustice may be and often is committed. In some cases it is in the power of a complainant to proceed against an alleged offender either by a criminal or civil proceeding. He often selects the former, because in that case the defendant cannot be heard in his defence, whereas in a civil court he is allowed to rebut or explain away the charge on oath. Ought it to be left in the power of any man to select a criminal tribunal in order to silence his adversary? I feel that I cannot better support the change I am advocating than by quoting the words of Mr. Joseph Napier (the ex-Chancellor of Ireland), in his address to the jurisprudence department of this society on that occasion.

"Although parties in a civil suit are competent and compellable to give evidence in that suit, an accused person cannot be called as a witness in his own behalf in a criminal proceeding. An accomplice in a murder who becomes an approver, interested in earning a full pardon, is a competent witness. The party accused is, indeed, permitted to make a statement, but he cannot maintain it by his oath, nor submit it to the test of cross-examination; so that if it be true, its value is unjustly depreciated. There is no case, I am confident, in which an innocent man who is put upon his trial does not feel the injustice of the existing law. There are cases in which no one but the accused could expose the falsity of the accusation; and there are cases also in which the accusation would not have been made, not, perhaps, even contemplated, but for the very rule which may screen it from exposure.' If Müller had been allowed to tender himself as a witness in his own behalf, and if he had done so, and had made the statements he made after his conviction, their veracity would have been tested, and they would have had their due weight on the question of his guilt, and we should have been spared the unseemly comments on the verdict, as also the injurious efforts of those who endeavoured to obtain a reprieve.

"The second proposition I would advance is, 'that husbands and wives should be rendered competent and compellable to give evidence for or against each other in criminal as well as in civil cases.' This question was also brought before this society, in the paper of Mr. Pitt Taylor to which I have alluded. He gives some brief but cogent answers to the objections raised against the admission of married parties as witnesses for or against each other in criminal trials. Although what I may add to what he has advanced on the subject may lack weight in comparison, I will venture to give some additional reasons why this restriction on evidence should be no longer enforced.

"The regard for the affection, sympathy, and confidence which ought to exist between husband and wife, has prompted it, and we cannot but respect that consideration; it would be a painful thing to witness the conviction of a husband or wife by the evidence of either, but we are often compelled to witness the proof of the guilt of a parent by the evidence of the child, or the child by that of the parent, a violation of our feelings no less revolting. Again, it may be said that a desire to screen the husband or wife may induce perjury; the same may be said in civil cases, and if the fear of encouraging perjury is to prevail over the desire to elicit truth, we must revert to our old practice, and exclude the testimony of parties in their own cases, as also those who have an interest in the result. But there is another view of the question; the husband or wife may be the only person capable of establishing the innocence of either when accused. In trials for bigamy, the woman with whom the second marriage is had is a competent witness; she may in fact be a legal wife, since the first marriage may be invalid, or if not, she may be as much attached to the prisoner as if she were. Again, in such trials, the legal wife is not a competent witness; she cannot be heard either to prove or disprove the charge, and thus justice often miscarries.

"In common cases of assault, married parties are sentenced to fine and imprisonment on the testimony of each other, and no objection is raised. In suits for necessities supplied to the wife, if the marriage be denied, their testimony will be received; again, in courts of equity, they may depose in support of their several adverse claims. In the Divorce Court, both or either of them is competent and compellable to give evidence of cruelty or desertion, or of the misconduct provoking them, although the question of adultery may also be in issue. Again, in suits for nullity of marriage, the quasi husband and wife are competent and compellable witnesses, and have been heard for and against each other, although it was obvious that revolting disclosures must be made; and, lastly, the judge of the Divorce Court has the power which he has frequently exercised of calling the petitioner before him to test the sincerity of his proceedings and his conduct towards his wife. It requires, then, but a step further in the path of justice to render married parties competent and compellable to give evidence, whether in favour of themselves or against each other, in every issue that can be raised.

"My third proposition is, 'That parties to a suit, of whatever nature, should be rendered competent and compellable to give evidence for or against each other.' Lord Denman's Act of 1851, contained the proviso (insisted on, as is said, by the then Lord Chancellor Truro), 'That parties to a suit instituted in consequence of adultery, or in any action for breach of promise of marriage, should not be admitted as witnesses therein.' It was, no doubt, a regard for morality, and a desire to prevent exposure and also perjury, which prompted the adoption of these provisions, added to the fear of losing the enactment altogether if they were resisted. It was said, in support of them, that a wife charged with adultery should not be compelled to declare her own infamy; 'no person is bound to criminate himself,' is the lenient but just maxim of English jurisprudence; but, on the other hand, it was said that she might be the only person capable of explaining away the suspicions against her, of establishing her innocence, and that the latter consideration ought to outweigh the former. Again, a husband may be the only person capable of proving his wife's infidelity; and so strongly has the present judge of the Divorce Court felt this, that he has not hesitated, notwithstanding the proviso I have named, to obtain from a husband himself, in such a case, the proof of his wife's guilt. 'The 43rd section of the Divorce Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), empowers the Court to examine the petitioner, but it provides that he shall not be bound to answer any question tending to shew that he or she has been guilty of adultery; but it is silent as to his or her answering any question tending to shew that the respondent has been guilty of adultery.' By the act (27 & 28 Vict. c. 54), for improving the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in Ireland, passed last session, this power of summoning witness before it is given to the Court.

"To shew the anomalies that may arise from excluding the evidence of parties to suits instituted in consequence of adultery, I will relate what actually occurred in a well-known case (Evans v. Robinson, 1857) only a few years since. A. brought an action against H. for criminal conversation with C., A.'s wife—not one of those parties could be examined as a witness in that trial. A., at the same time, in order to obtain eventually an act of Parliament to set aside his marriage, instituted proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court for a divorce a mensâ et thoro. He and his wife being parties to the suit, their evidence could not be received, but that of B., the alleged paramour, could be, and was, received. A. then indicted B. for perjury committed in that suit. On his trial, B.'s mouth, as defendant—as the person charged with a criminal offence—was closed. But A., the prosecutor, was a valid witness, as also his wife, and she was examined for the defence, and denied that any criminal intimacy between her and B. had ever taken place, and thus supported the truth of his evidence. The Divorce Court was then established, and A. petitioned for a divorce. B. was necessarily made a co-respondent; then A., B., and C. were all parties to the suit, and the evidence of each was again inadmissible.

"In a case very recently before the Divorce Court (Bancroft v. Bancroft, D. C., Nov. 16), a wife petitioned for a judicial separation by reason of her husband's cruelty; he replied by charging her with adultery. In that suit the wife was a competent witness, and the alleged adulterer was also produced to sustain the adultery charged. The jury found that the cruelty of the husband was established, but that the adultery of the wife was not. Whereas, in a cross petition by the husband, charging his wife with adultery, neither the wife's testimony nor that of the alleged adulterer, the co-respondent, could be received. The Court was moved, on the part of the wife, to allow the verdict in the first suit to be pleaded, in order to supply the want of proof in the second suit arising from the incompetence of the witnesses, but the Judge Ordinary (Sir J. Wilde) refused the motion, saying, 'That the law distinctly declared that the adultery of the wife should be twice tried, because in one case it should be tried by one species of evidence, and in the other by another and a different species of evidence. In the suit by the wife, both she and the alleged adulterer were competent witnesses, and in the suit by the husband they were not. All the Court could do was to administer the law as it existed. The suit must therefore proceed. It is no answer to the petitioner that the wife (the respondent) had obtained a verdict upon evidence which was not admissible in this suit.'

In the case of Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson (Div. Court, Nov. 17), the rule excluding the evidence of the parties to the suit has been loudly complained of by the counsel both for the petitioner and respondent. In a well-known case before the Divorce Court (Robinson v. Lane, 1 Swab. & T. 388), shortly after its being established, an attempt was made to examine the co-respondent to prove his own and the wife's (the respondent's) innocence; of the three judges presiding (the full court) one (Mr. Justice Wightman) was in favour of his being dismissed from the suit, in order that he might then be an admissible witness, as the evidence produced (the wife's written confessions) did not criminate him; but the two other judges were of a different opinion. The case was adjourned until a Divorce Court Amendment Act, then in progress, passed, in which a clause was inserted enabling the Court to dismiss a co-respondent from the suit should the evidence not affect him.

* The 24th section of the Probate Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), runs thus—"The Court of Probate may require the attendance of any party in person, or of any person whom it may think fit to examine, in respect of matters or causes testamentary."

"This is a slight relaxation of the rule which excludes the evidence of a co-respondent, but it is obvious that it must be a very exceptional case in which, during the progress of the inquiry, it may transpire that the evidence does not directly affect a co-respondent. This relaxation is, then, of no very great value, and the rule still practically exists, that no party to a suit instituted in consequence of adultery is an admissible witness. It is true that the judge of the court may, ex proprio motu, examine the petitioner; but he can put no question, either to him or her, to elicit whether he or she has been guilty of adultery. Wherever, however, desertion or cruelty is alleged, whether coupled with adultery or not, either party is competent to give evidence on those questions where the suit is for dissolution of marriage; but, strange to say, where a judicial separation only is sought, on the ground of adultery coupled with desertion or cruelty, in that case, I repeat, strange to say, the evidence of the parties is still excluded. This, no doubt, was an oversight on the part of the Legislature. In actions for breaches of promise of marriage, the woman, the plaintiff, would be the most important witness in support of her case; in an action for damages by reason of a breach of contract, the evidence of the plaintiff is received, and why not in an action for breach of promise of marriage, which is, in fact, a breach of contract? On the other hand, the defendant might explain away all or much that was adduced to fix him with the promise. In actions for seduction, and in suits for nullity of marriage, the woman gives evidence subject to cross-examination, at times of a very disagreeable and painful nature. As bearing on this question, in order to shew an evil of the present law, I will narrate what took place in a recent trial. An action was brought by a lady for breach of promise of marriage, and also for a breach of contract, inasmuch as the defendant had promised her, upon her giving up to him certain letters, which contained language amounting to a promise of marriage, that he would give her a certain sum by way of annuity. She gave up the letters, but the defendant refused to give her the sum he had promised her. It was contended that the plaintiff could not be examined as a witness to prove the breach of contract, as a breach of promise of marriage was also in issue. The breach of promise was thereupon abandoned, but it was still contended that the action was virtually for breach of promise of marriage. The judge, however, before whom the case was tried, would not take that view, saying, the only issue remaining was the breach of contract. The counsel for the defendant then threatened a bill of exceptions, but the case was soon settled by the withdrawal of a juror. Had it not, an intricate point might have been raised, as to whether the plaintiff was a competent witness or not.

"My last proposition is, 'That judges should be empowered to summon before them any person to give evidence they may think necessary, whether in a criminal trial or civil case, and that they should be empowered to adjourn the trial or case for that purpose.' It not unfrequently occurs, that a witness who might give important testimony touching the facts or merits of a case, is designedly kept back by a plaintiff or defendant, who knows that if that person were called to give evidence it would weaken if not destroy his case. If the object of judicial inquiry be not to give a triumph to either party, but to arrive at truth, it is desirable that every means should be adopted to that end, that the judge and jury (if there be one) should be informed of every fact and circumstance which may conduce to a just decision; but if a witness who can throw light on the question in issue is purposely kept back, that object is necessarily defeated. Whereas, if the judge had the power of summoning any person before him whose evidence he conceived might be of value, and were enabled to adjourn the case for that purpose, if the witness were not at hand, the ends of justice would not be so often defeated, nor should we hear counsel complaining, whether honestly or not, of important testimony being withheld for fear of weakening his opponent's case. In the case of Gedney v. Smith, recently before the Master of the Rolls relative as to the birth of a child, if the accoucher who was represented to have been present at the alleged birth had been produced as a witness, at the instance of the judge (neither plaintiff nor defendant being willing to do so), a few brief questions would have put an end to the inquiry. An inconvenience, however, naturally suggests itself here, viz the adjournment of the case. Where the trial takes place before a judge without a jury no difficulty can arise.

"Adjournment for further evidence is of frequent occurrence in the county courts and in the Divorce Court, under the 44th section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85; the case of Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson was adjourned from July last for further evidence, and is now before the Court; and this, although there was a jury in the case; and it was satisfactory to find that the same jury would be reassembled. In the Ecclesiastical Court, the maxim of the civil law, 'Causa nunquam concluditur contra judicem,' was often acted on; where new facts were discovered, further evidence was received; but I must admit, that where a jury is concerned, it might be inconvenient, and sometimes impracticable, to secure the attendance of the same jury at the rehearing of the case. In criminal trials, a prisoner is oftentimes prevented from producing evidence which might exculpate him, by want of means or other causes. At the Middlesex Sessions of August last, a man was tried for robbery; the counsel for the defence commented on the hardship of the law, which did not permit the prisoner to give his own account of the transaction on oath, with the safeguard of examination; the prisoner was found guilty, and then he was asked, as if in mockery, what he had to say; he protested his innocence, and added, that if a witness whom he named could have been produced, he could have cleared himself of the charge; the judge replied, 'I am not going to try your case again; if you have anything to say in mitigation of punishment, say it.' The prisoner could only repeat, 'that he was innocent; that he denied what the prosecutrix had sworn to; and that if he were put back, he would endeavour to find the gentleman he had named.' The judge, in consideration of his good character, sentenced him to nine months' imprisonment, with hard labour. I have said, a prisoner is often prevented from procuring evidence for want of means; this raises a painful and very difficult question. It is often said, with more point than truth, that there is one law for the rich, and another for the poor—let us endeavour to prevent this opprobrium being cast upon English justice. Might not something be done whereby a poor man might be assisted in procuring evidence at the public cost to prove his innocence? If we do ever have a Minister of Justice, as I trust we some day shall have, let us hope that his title will not be merely nominal, and that his attention may be turned to this subject. Before I conclude, I would say one word more on the question of adjourning criminal trials for further evidence. The theory of a criminal trial by jury is, that the jury having charge of the prisoner cannot be discharged, or even separated, until they have given their verdict, or satisfied the judge of their inability to do so. If this is imperatively and absolutely necessary, no criminal trial could be adjourned for any length of time. But let me ask, is it imperatively necessary that this theoretic custody should be retained?

"Another objection may be urged, viz. that a person charged with an offence has a right to have the charge against him established at once; that the evidence is not to be produced piecemeal; that if the trial might be adjourned, those for the prosecution would do so, if they found their chain of evidence incomplete; but I would answer, that it should only be done when there was, to the judge, an apparent justifiable substantive ground for it, as is the case when a trial is adjourned before it commences. It is true, it may tend to prove guilt; but, on the other hand, it may tend to prove innocence. If we are sincere when we say, 'Better let the guilty escape, than that the innocent should suffer,' then I demand, in the spirit of that maxim, that we should act up to what we profess. I have now briefly, but I fear imperfectly, expressed the views that I, in common with some others, entertain on the present state of our law of evidence. I trust it is a subject not unworthy the consideration of this society; I trust it will make some effort towards its amelioration; in so doing, it will furnish another endeavour on our part towards the amendment and improvement of our laws, and thus we shall, as I conceive, confer an essential benefit on the community at large."

Mr. Charles Hall has been appointed one of the conveyancing counsel of the Court of Chancery, in the place of Mr. Joshua Williams, resigned. It would be well if in every case the Lord Chancellor had exercised his patronage so unexceptionably as in the appointment of Mr. Joshua Williams and his able successor.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.—The fourth meeting of the Department of Jurisprudence and Amendment of the Law will be held at 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, on Monday next, the 19th instant, when a paper will be read by Mr. Serjeant Pulling, intitled "A Proposal for Amending the Laws affecting Jurymen." The Hon. George Denman, Q. C., M. P., will take the chair at eight o'clock.—The Standing Committee of the Department will meet at seven o'clock.

MINUTES OF THE LAST MEETING.—Monday, Dec. 5, 1864.—The Attorney-General in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. Mr. F. S. Reilly read a paper, intitled "Observations on a Digest of Law, with reference to the Address delivered at York by the President of the Department." After some observations from Mr. Symonds, it was moved by Mr. Edward Webster, and seconded by Mr. Macqueen, Q. C., "that Mr. Reilly's paper be printed, and circulated among the members." A discussion followed, in which Mr. Waterhouse, Dr. Waddilove, Mr. Hastings, Sir Eardley Wilmot, Mr. R. Wilson, Mr. Daniel, Q. C., and the Chairman took part, after which the resolution was put and carried.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 24, 1864.

THE judgments of the barons of the Exchequer, in the recent case of Re Domingo Capdevielle (10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1155), express so much dissatisfaction with the judgments of the Lords Justices in the case of Re Wallop's Trusts (Id. 328), that we cannot help thinking it would have been better if they had pronounced judgment according to their own opinions, and so left it to the officers of the Crown to obtain the opinion of the Court of final appeal on the question, whether the rule, "Mobilia sequuntur personam," does not apply to the Succession Duty Act as well as to the Legacy Duty Act. The Lord Chief Baron, in his judgment, remarks, that the Court which decided the case of Re Wallop's Trusts is not a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Exchequer in matters of revenue; and it is further to be observed, that although one of the Lords Justices expresses a decided opinion on the question, it is impossible to say on what grounds the opinion of his colleague was based; and, moreover, the expression of opinion was not necessary for the decision of that case.

The difference between the liability of the estate of a foreigner to legacy duty and to succession duty must turn upon a difference in the language of the statutes which respectively create those duties; but where is that difference? The barons of the Exchequer have not been able to discover it. Thus says Baron Bramwell—"But then it is said, that if he escapes the legacy duty, he comes within the succession duty; and cases are cited accordingly. And although I have great faith in, and respect for, the authority of the judge who pronounced an opinion in accordance with that view (it certainly was not very actively concurred in by his learned brother), I confess I have a great difficulty in following that authority, for that reason, and it does seem to me, that whatever arguments can be used for the purpose of shewing that the Legacy Duty Act must be restricted to persons and things the subject of British legislation, to the extent of exonerating parties in such cases as this from the legacy duty, are equally applicable to the Succession Duty Act; and the Succession Duty Act equally requires a restriction in its construction with the Legacy Duty Act, because everything that is true of the one is, to my mind, true of the other. I cannot see why the same reasoning should not apply to succession duty that applies to legacy duty." We believe that the difficulty which the learned baron felt in not applying the same reasoning to one duty as to the other is felt by most members of the profession, and that the soundness of the decision in Re Wallop's Trusts is very generally doubted.

The Chief Baron expresses himself even more strongly:—"If I were to hold the domicil French, I personally should have considerable difficulty in deciding that the property was liable to our succession duty; but I so far respect the opinion of the learned persons who gave the judgment in question, that I should be disposed, for my own part, to adopt their decision, though I have very great doubt whether it be the correct one." There is much force in the term "our succession duty," in the judgment of the Chief Baron, for it suggests the argument, that the same foreigner's estate, which is chargeable under the Succession Duty Act of this country, may also be liable to a similar duty by the laws of his own country. Should the rule, "Mobilia sequuntur personam," be applicable by that law, the estate of a person so situated is liable to a double duty, and to be subject to very large deductions. We cannot, therefore, but think that the Court of Exchequer, entertaining these opinions, and, as its Chief remarks, not considering the Lords Justices as a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and being peculiarly the Court to decide upon questions affecting the revenue, might have acted upon their own opinions, and reversed the decision. (Re Wallop's Trusts). It would, then, have been for the Crown to obtain the judgment of the House of Lords, and so settle the question finally. In a later case (The Attorney-General v. The Count and Countess Blucher de Wahlstaff, 10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1159), the Court of Exchequer adhered to their previous decision on the question, and therefore we can only hope that a case will soon occur in which the amount of duty in dispute will render it worth the while of the representatives of the foreigner to appeal to the House of Lords. There is a well-established principle, that the British Legislature only legislates for British subjects, including in the term "subjects" foreigners resident in this country, and availing themselves of the benefit and protection of its laws. Foreigners not so situated, as they have not the benefit, ought not to be liable to the burthens which those laws create.

This principle, though the question arose on a different subject, was fully considered by the House of Lords in the case of Jeffrey v. Boosey (4 H. L. C. 815). And the Lord Chancellor, in pronouncing his judgment (p. 955), thus expresses himself:—"Prima facie the Legislature of this country must be taken to make laws for its own subjects exclusively; and where, as in the statute now under consideration, an exclusive privilege is given to a particular class at the expense of the community, the object of giving that privilege must be taken to have been a national object, and the privileged class to be confined to a portion of that community for the general advantage of which the enactment is made. I include within the word 'subjects' all persons who are in the Queen's dominions, and who thus owe her a temporary allegiance." And Lord St. Leonards lays down the rule still more broadly (p. 980):—"I think we may fairly consider that it ought not to be denied that, speaking generally, an act of Parliament, having a municipal operation, cannot be held to extend prima facie beyond our own subjects." It is true, that in the case of Jeffreys v. Boosey, the foreigner was claiming the benefit of a British act of Parliament; but if foreigners are not entitled to the benefits, they cannot, as we have already observed, on any principle of justice, be liable to the burthens which the Legislature imposes; unless the statute contains the most express language to that effect.

It seems so harsh upon foreigners that their estates should be liable to our succession duty, that, if the decision in Re Wallop's Trusts be finally upheld, we should hope an act would be passed to relieve them. The Succession Duty Act is grasping enough in its provisions and in the wide construction which has been put upon it, without this further discredit being attached to its name.

THE verdict of the jury on the second trial in the Divorce Court, of the case of Stone v. Stone and Appleton, suggests some grave considerations. On each occasion the trial was one of several days duration, the first trial being before the late Sir Cresswell Cresswell. It was clear that that learned and able judge was perfectly satisfied with the first verdict, inasmuch as he strenuously differed from the other members of the full court as to the propriety of granting a new trial; and yet, when a new trial is granted and takes place before a very intelligent and patient jury, the former verdict is reversed. This, no doubt, is an event which occasionally happens in the common-law courts, but in a case for a dissolution of marriage, the question is suggested whether the judge should not direct the jury that they ought to require evidence almost conclusive before they find a verdict which may expose a woman to shame and misery for the rest of her life. With the most sincere respect for the conscientiousness and great powers of the late judge of the court, we are disposed to think that he was too apt to infer adultery from levity of conduct in a woman, and that he disregarded what most persons believe to be the fact, that many women will be light and indelicate in their conduct, and yet, from conscientious scruples or fear of consequences, stop short of the great offence. In the case of Stone v. Appleton, had not the friends of the lady had a strong conviction of her innocence, and stoutly supported her in her struggle to preserve her honour, she would have been stamped as an adulteress for life; as it is, when the case is submitted to a different judge and jury, she comes out of the court rescued from disgrace. We rejoice at the result of this second trial, for we think it will incline juries to sift more thoroughly the evidence laid before them, and not to find that adultery has been committed where the facts can be reconciled with innocence. The Scotch verdict of "not proven," where their minds are in doubt, is particularly applicable to such a case.

SOCIAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION.—LAW AMENDMENT DEPARTMENT.

THE fourth meeting of this society was held on Monday last at No. 1, Adam-street, Adelphi. The Hon. G. Denman, Q. C., M. P., in the chair.

Mr. Serjeant Pulling read a paper, intitled "A Proposal for amending the Law affecting Jurymen." The qualification of jurors had undergone a gradual change without anything like a corresponding advantage to the public. The standard of qualification was now below what was formerly presumed, and a very small proportion of those who now act as jurymen were assessed at even 100*l.* a year. At present an inferior class was included in the jury list, and persons were excluded who were by education and intelligence qualified to discharge the duties of jurymen. If every person possessed of 100*l.* a year were included in the jury book it would be a great improvement. The present state of the law of exemption required amendment, and the principle of exemption was productive of much abuse. The exemption from serving on juries extended in this country to several classes, while in France the exemption only extended to the ministers of religion. Persons above sixty years old were exempted in this country; and the consequence was, that a number of capable men between sixty and seventy were relieved from serving on juries. The jurors' book should be purged of all persons convicted of fraud or crime. He proposed that a conviction for any criminal offence should prevent persons from acting as jurymen for ten years; and he would make it an indictable offence for any such person to act as a jurymen within the time he had mentioned. If the jurors' book were reformed in the way he proposed, special juries would be less frequently demanded. An allowance was made to special jurors, but none to common jurors; and that was not fair. While ample compensation was given to witnesses, none were given to common jurymen, and that was an injustice that ought to be remedied. There should be also a proper system of registration of jurymen; and without that all other reform would be ineffective. The jury list should be revised, as the voters' list was revised, and the revising barrister should be invested with power to bring all necessary parties before him, to impose penalties for giving false information, and, in the case of officials, for neglect of duty. He should strike out of the list all persons not qualified or who were exempt; and set forth, in separate columns, those who were qualified to serve as grand jurors and on special juries. He should forward the lists to the clerk of the peace and town clerk, and the lists should be printed and circulated, under the same regulations as the lists of voters were printed and circulated. The rota for service should be settled by the revising barrister, and the jurymen should be summoned according to that rota. Any one who did not give a lawful excuse for not attending should be subject to penalties, to be increased in case of a second default. In conclusion, he proposed that the jurors' book should contain the names of all persons possessed of 100*l.* a year from any source; that the law of disqualification and exemption should be amended; that applications for special juries should be less frequently made; that an allowance should be made to jurymen; that there should be a more perfect system of registration of jurors and revision of the jurors' lists; and that there should be a rule to compel the attendance of jurymen, and thus divide the labour amongst them.

In answer to some remark,

Mr. Serjeant Pulling said, he would repeal the law that gave a general exemption to barristers and surgeons, and give a partial exemption to those only whose professional avocations at the time they were summoned prevented them from acting as jurors.

After some discussion,

The Chairman said he would be sorry to see any ill-advised or rash legislation on the subject, because, on the whole, the system worked well, and the work was cheerfully done by the jurors. A great deal, however, might be done by improving the ventilation of the jury-rooms, and increasing the accommodation af-ferred to the jurors; thus shewing that they were regarded as persons who attended to discharge most important duties.

On the motion of Mr. Daniel, Q. C., seconded by Sir Eardley Wilmot, it was resolved, that the paper be received and printed.

The death of Francis Turner, Esq., of No. 7, New-square, Lincoln's-inn, and of Queen-square, Westminster, requires more than ordinary notice, in justice to his character and merits, and in satisfaction of the respect and regret of his numerous friends, and of the legal profession. In the somewhat secluded and modest department of conveyancing, Mr. Turner had long been eminent for the learning, diligence, and ability which that always critical and often abstruse and profound science exacts. He had in youth been the favourite pupil of Preston, who, struck with his talents and acquirements, remarked, "They have sent me a pupil who knows as much as myself;" and Turner succeeded to his chambers. And in the course of a long practice, exceeding half of the present century, he became the instructor of several hundred pupils in succession; among whom were the Lord Justice Turner and the late Mr. Jacob. As a copyhold lawyer, Mr. Turner's reputation was peculiarly great; and in all questions of real property, his opinions were most trusted and esteemed. But he loved and cultivated the whole study of the law; he had well digested its principles; could readily recall its leading cases; and had the judgment and discernment requisite to apply this learning to new circumstances, and complications. Mr. Turner was a member of the Inner Temple. He was called to the bar on the 23rd November, 1810. In 1848 he was elected a bencher of that society, and in 1861 he held the office of its treasurer. He was born on the 20th January, 1785. The late Rev. Richard Turner, incumbent of Great Yarmouth, was his father. The present Lord Justice Turner is his younger brother. He married, on the 2nd October, 1810, Jane, eldest daughter of James Sayers, Esq., of Hopton, Suffolk.—Mr. Turner was by no means the mere lawyer. He delighted in general literature, and devoted his leisure to the books by which the great spirits of the past communicate with the present. He was a member of the Camden, Percy, Shakespeare, Arundel, and several Archaeological Societies. His manners were remarkably gentle, ingenuous, and pleasing. His disposition was ever kind and cheerful. His conversation animated, and pregnant with humour and instruction. Learning and modesty, combined with high integrity, good sense, and good taste, marked him for a lawyer, a scholar, and a gentleman. His health had been failing for some time previous, and on Sunday the 11th instant, he expired, without much suffering, at his residence, Queen's-square, Westminster. The great organ of the Temple church, on the Sunday following, pealed forth, for his requiem, the Dead March in Saul. The walls and pillars of that beautiful building, vibrated their last sad tribute to his character and standing; but his memory will ever linger in the hearts of his friends, and a large circle of professional and social acquaintance give a blessing to his tomb.

FROM THE TEMPLE TO THE TEMPLE.—Some days ago a paragraph appeared in the papers, stating that a case was under the consideration of the Benchers of the Inner Temple, one of whose members, who had been called to the bar, having been ascertained to be a clergyman in holy orders. A different course has been adopted by a barrister of considerable practice, who has deliberately renounced his profession and obtained admission into the ranks of the ministry. The gentleman in question, Mr. Edward Penrose Hathaway, was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, and graduated in 1839, when he took classical honours. Shortly afterwards he was called to the bar, and at once began to lay the foundation of what became a lucrative practice. Turning, however, his thoughts to clerical life, he obtained a "title to orders" from the Rev. Anthony W. Thorold, M.A., rector of the metropolitan parish of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, and upon that title he was ordained deacon by the Bishop of London, in the Chapel Royal, Whitehall. He will act as curate of St. Giles's, and at the Christmas ordination of 1865, will be admitted to the priesthood of the Church. Mr. Hathaway is but one out of many barristers who have abandoned the law for the Gospel. Dr. Thirlwall, now Bishop of St. David's, was called to the bar by the Society of Lincoln's-inn in 1825, and practised until 1828, when he was ordained and appointed to the rectory of Kirby Underdale. Dr. Sier, a well-known London incumbent, was formerly a barrister. Several other instances might be mentioned. A case of a somewhat different character from either of the foregoing may be found in that of a gentleman who was for some time curate of St. George's, Hanover-square. Mr. Hugh Weightman was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and graduated in 1840. Shortly afterwards he was called to the bar. He continued in the pursuit of his profession for some years, and in 1850 was ordained by the late Dr. Bird Sumner, Archbishop of Canterbury. Two or three years since he returned to his old love, and is now again in full practice at the bar. This case differs from that of the gentleman called by the Society of the Inner Temple, inasmuch as when he became a member of the bar he was a layman.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to new Insurers EIGHTY PER CENT. of the Profits, at Quinquennial Divisions, or a low Rate of Premium without participation of Profits.

Since the establishment of the Company in 1821, the amount of Profits allotted to the Assured has exceeded in Cash value 600,000l., which represents equivalent Reversionary Bonuses of 1,058,000l.

After the Division of Profits at Christmas, 1859, the Life Assurances in force, with existing Bonuses thereon, amounted to upwards of 4,730,000l., the Income from the Life Branch 207,000l. per annum, and the Life Assurance Fund, independent of the Capital, exceeded 1,618,000l.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.—Insurances are effected upon every description of property at home and abroad at moderate rates.

No expense is incurred in effecting a new Insurance beyond the payment of the Annual Premium and Duty, when the Premium amounts to 5s.

Claims liberally and promptly settled.
Notice is hereby given, that FIRE POLICIES which expire at Christmas must be renewed within fifteen days at this office; or with Mr.
SAMS, No. 1, St. James's-street, corner of Pall-mall; or with the Company's Agents throughout the Kingdom, otherwise they become void.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 31, 1864.

THE scheme of the Bar Committee on reporting has not been the only or the first fruit of Mr. Daniel's agitation. The very next number of the Reports of Cases in the Rolls Court that followed the publication of his first letter bore this defiant inscription:—"The authorised Reports of Cases argued and determined in the Rolls Court;" and since the December meeting of the Bar, Mr. Beavan has devoted a page in every part of his reports to the display of a notice, that "these reports continue, as heretofore, to be published with the express sanction and authority of the Right Hon. the Master of the Rolls." Doubtless, the authorised reporter has not been content with self assertion, but has endeavoured to search out and count such faults or inadvertencies as may have contributed to provoke the outcry against the order to which he belongs. During the year which is now ending he has published five parts of reports, containing 888 pages, and 173 cases. In the last of these parts, which belongs to the 33rd volume of a series commencing with the present reign, we may expect to find exemplified all the good results that can flow from experience acting under the sanction of authority, and stimulated by competition and the fear of revolution. The main characteristics of good reports are—1. A judicious selection of the cases, avoiding mere repetitions of settled principles or rules, cases that would be obviously wrongly decided if they were decided otherwise, cases involving combinations not likely to recur, &c. 2. Brevity in setting forth, omitting all irrelevant facts and arguments, even abridging the language of the judgment, except in those rare cases in which the importance of the occasion and the ability of the judge conspire to produce a work of art. 3. Compact printing, so as to reduce to a minimum the serious inconvenience involved in the mere bulk of a working library. 4. Prompt publication. 5. Accuracy—an essential virtue, and, we believe, seldom found wanting, so far as regards the material points of a case.

The first case in Mr. Beavan's last part is Coventry v. Barclay, decided on the 19th June, 1863, published on the 24th November, 1864, having been the subject of an appeal to the Lord Chancellor, who reversed the decree of the Master of the Rolls on one point, and whose judgment, pronounced on the 10th December, 1863, was published in THE JURIST on the 2nd January, 1864. The last case in the same part was decided on the 31st July, 1863. Such is Mr. Beavan's notion of the diligence which becomes an authorised reporter! To return to Coventry v. Barclay—we make no objection to Mr. Beavan's report of that case, except that it occupies seventeen pages of widely-spaced and meagre print, ten of which are devoted to a verbatim report of a written judgment that would have been much improved by compression to half its bulk. We are sorry to say, that in THE JURIST the case is given at nearly equal length, but the economy of printing is such that it occupies little more than three pages.

But it is in the selection of cases that Mr. Beavan departs most widely from our ideal of a judicious reporter, who, we think, would not have devoted thirteen pages, nor even three lines, to the case of The Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Avon (33 Beav. 67), for the point, that a charter granted under the act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 78 (which Mr. Beavan cites as 1 Vict.), enabling the Crown to create a municipal corporation, has the effect which the act says it shall have, but not retrospectively, so as to avoid previous dealings with charity property.

Nor would our model reporter have reported May v. May (p. 81) merely to record that the Master of the Rolls had his doubts as to the accuracy of a certain copy of a lost document, and inferred, from the evidence, that a certain arrangement between a father and a son was intended for the exclusive benefit of the son; and held, that a conveyance by a father to a son might be valid, although intended as a qualification to vote. He would have refrained from adding Hora v. Hora (p. 89) to the authorities for the point, that if a fund is given in trust for the maintenance and education of infants, and they are properly maintained and educated, the trustee is not bound to account. He would not have insulted his readers with Semple v. Holland (p. 94), for the proposition, that a judgment creditor of a tenant for life cannot have an injunction to restrain his debtor from incurring a forfeiture by disusing the name and arms of an ancestor. He would not have added Hennessey v. Bray (p. 96) to the innumerable cases on the construction of wills, unless it had decided something more than that a gift to the first and other sons, successively, of A., according to the priority of their respective births, and their respective heirs (omitting "of the bodies"), confers estates tail; and that a trustee de facto is liable to account as a trustee de jure; and that a mortgagee of a life estate, limited to determine on alienation, who has taken possession, must account for the rents and profits. Nor Fergusson v. The London and Brighton Railway Company (p. 103), to teach us that a piece of ground held on lease with a house and garden, but separated from them by a public road, is not part of the house, within the 92nd section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. Nor Churchill v. Shepherd (p. 107), that property vested in a lady before the execution of her marriage settlement, but outstanding and overlooked, is not within a covenant to settle property which might descend, or devolve to or vest in her during the coverture. Nor Bashford v. Cann (p. 109), that a contract by a grantor of a life annuity to assign the policy on the grantor's life, in case the grantor should redeem the policy at a fixed price, does not entitle the representatives of the grantor to the policy in case of his death without redeeming (though, certainly, that such a claim should have been brought to a hearing must be reckoned among the curiosities of litigation). Nor would he have added Sykes v. Sheard (p. 114) to the cases deciding that a discretionary power to consent given to A., B., and C., cannot be exercised after A.'s death by B. and C. We think, too, that it was not worth while to report Re The East Wheel Martha Mining Company (p. 119) for the point, that where the directors have a discretion as to the evidence they will require of the title of a proposed transferor of shares, it is not unreasonable to require his certificate to be left for examination. Nor Troup v. Ricardo (p. 122) to shew that the Court will not act against a person without giving him an opportunity of being heard. Nor did the case of Brown v. Kennedy (p. 133), however interesting as a matter of scandal, require twenty pages for the elucidation of the very trite legal proposition involved in the decision.

We turn from Mr. Beavan to a greater offender. Twelve parts of the Common Bench Reports, containing 2208 pages, and eighty-six cases (being an average of twenty-five pages to each case), have been published during the present year. There are nine cases in the part published on the 23rd of this month. In Fish v. Kelly (p. 194) the simple point was, that an attorney who, acting for A., became acquainted with the contents of a certain deed, is not liable to an action for negligence at the suit of B., to whom, not being employed as his solicitor, he unintentionally mistakes the effect of the deed. The report fills twelve pages. No question arose on the deed; it was admitted that the plaintiff, acting on the statement of the defendant, had suffered loss; and the only question was as to the defendant's liability, yet Mr. Scott devotes five pages to a verbatim copy of the deed. Naylor v. Mortimore (p. 207) was a special case; it fills thirty-seven pages; the special case, and the speeches of the judges, are given verbatim. This is easier for the reporter than for his subscribers. Reed v. Edwards (p. 245), deciding that the owner of a dog, who, knowing its propensities, suffers it to be at large, is answerable for damage done by it in his neighbour's preserve, did not require four pages and a half for the statement of the facts. Hill v. Nuttall (p. 262), which turned entirely on the construction of an obscure contract, and ought not to have been reported at all, fills seventeen pages. In Bridges v. Potts (p. 314), the questions were, whether, under a stipulation in an agreement for a lease for twenty-one years of a mine, that the lessee might "at any time determine the agreement, or the lease agreed to be granted, on giving six months' notice," the notice must be given to expire on the anniversary of the commencement of the tenancy; and whether the dead rent was apportionable. Mr. Scott sets forth every clause of the agreement, the notice, on the terms of which nothing turned, two long letters, which were wholly irrelevant, and the defendant's "points for argument," all verbatim. Lastly, there is the case of Pearson v. Göschen (p. 352), upon the construction of a charterparty, involving no principle of general application.

The fact is, that Mr. Scott's reports are a nuisance, and an intolerable grievance to every lawyer who desires to possess a complete collection of "authorised" reports. Mr. Best, Mr. Hemming, and Mr. Miller, gentlemen who report conscientiously and with ability (though we think that even their reports are by no means unexceptionable), have protested against the proposal to place the reports under the control of a council, or of an editor. We think that the persistence of Messrs. Beavan and Scott as authorised reporters is quite sufficient to demonstrate the absolute necessity of such control.

We are glad that Mr. Fraser is both persevering, and well encouraged to persevere, in his endeavour to procure the establishment of law classes for articled clerks. We have never had much sympathy with the recent attempts to reform the legal education of the Bar. Students of the Inns of Court and barristers newly called have abundant leisure and ample means for professional study; but an articled clerk in a busy office has little or no opportunity during the day for the study of legal principles. For him, legal evening classes, free and familiar intercourse with the teacher, access to a good library of institutional works, practice in legal discussion, and the stimulus of frequent examinations, seem to be almost a necessity. But these have not hitherto been provided. The lectures at the Law Institution are good, as far as they go, but they fall far short of what is required. Evening classes, under the management of first-rate men, should be established in London and in the large provincial towns; and some arrangement should be made for fixing a reasonable average limit to the hours of attendance at the office, so far as articled clerks are concerned. Attorneys can never master the details of every branch of the law, and it is of essential importance that they should, before they commence practice, be thoroughly grounded in general principles. They will then have a sound guide in the emergencies of business, and will be qualified to appreciate and criticise the advice given to them, and the work done for them, by their counsel. Thus, the education bestowed upon articled clerks may react upon the Bar.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—I am exceedingly obliged to you for having inserted in your columns my letter on the subject of law classes, and I now beg to inform those of your readers who may be articled clerks, that the memorial therein referred to will not remain at Mr. Harrison's, 116, Chancery-lane, after the 14th January, as it is then intended to present the same to the Council of the Incorporated Law Society.

It may here be observed, that the memorial has not received so many signatures as were anticipated, but this may probably be attributed to the fact that articled clerks do not, as a rule, avail themselves of the valuable information and instruction to be derived from a regular perusal of your or the other legal journals, consequently but few of them are aware of the memorial.

Increased facilities are undoubtedly required for the assistance of articled clerks in the prosecution of their studies, and as the object the memorial has in view is to improve the present defective system, if you, Mr. Editor, could favour us with any suggestion upon the matter, you would, allow me to say, be very materially assisting this humble effort on our part.

I have the honour to remain, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
W. FRASER.

LAW CLASSES.

This is to give notice, that a memorial to the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, asking them to institute law classes for the assistance of articled clerks in the prosecution of their studies, lies for signature at Mr. W. Harrison's, Law Stationer, 116, Chancery-lane.

All those gentlemen, who may be articled clerks, and consider the existing means for their education to be insufficient, are requested to support the memorial, and forward (by letter) any suggestions they may think fit to make, to Mr. W. J. Fraser, 78, Dean-street, Soho, W.

Letters from the Master of the Rolls, Sir J. P. Wilde, Vice-Chancellor Wood, Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Mr. Daniel Q. C., Mr. J. G. Phillimore, Q. C., Mr. Serjeant Simon, Dr. Herbert Broom, and T. H. Haddan, Esq., B. C. L., late Lecturer at the Incorporated Law Society, as well as from other members of the profession, have been received, expressing for the most part their approval of the object the memorial has in view.

PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Hilary Educational Term, by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

The Reader will trace the History of our Constitution from the reign of Charles the First down to the last period which the time allotted to each Course of Lectures will allow him to reach.

He will dwell on the Legal History of each reign, as recorded in the Statute-book, the State Trials, and the Reports.

In his Private Classes he will pursue the same plan from the reign of Richard the Second down to the last reign that his Course will include.

The books to which he will constantly refer are—Rapin's History—Blackstone's Commentaries, edition by Kerr—Hallam's Constitutional History—Chapter on the Constitution in Hallam's Middle Ages—Brodie's History—Burnet's Memoirs—Lord Clarendon's History and Correspondence—May's History—State Trials—Somers's Tracts—Lord St. Leonards' Preface to Gilbert on Uses—Milton's Prose Works—Matthew Paris—Sullivan's Lectures—Millar's History—Creasy on the Constitution—Walsingham—Knighton—Fortescue (Amos's Edition)—Reeves's History of the English Law—Ralph's History—State Tracts.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, Two Courses of Public Lectures (there being Six Lectures in each Course), on the following subjects:—

An Elementary Course.

1. On the Rights and Liabilities of Married Women with regard to their Separate Property; and on Restraints upon Alienation.
2. On the Right of a Married Woman and her Children to a Settlement out of her Personal and Real Estate.

3. On the Relief afforded in Equity against the Consequences of Mistake.

An Advanced Course.

1. On the Validity of Voluntary Conveyances and Donations Mortis Causa.

2. On the Equitable Doctrine of Election.

In the Elementary Private Class, the subjects discussed will be—The Doctrine of Cyprès with regard to Charitable Trusts—The Nature of Legal and Equitable Mortgages, and Suits for Redemption and Foreclosure.

In the Advanced Private Class, the Lectures will comprehend—The Administration of Assets, and the Principles of Equity Pleading.

THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property, &c. proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, Two Courses of Public Lectures (there being Six Lectures in each Course), on the following subjects:—

Elementary Course.

1. The Statutes known as Lord St. Leonards' and Lord Cranworth's Acts, in continuation and conclusion of the last Term's Lectures.

2. The Law of Mortmain and Charitable Uses.

Advanced Course.

The Law of Fines and Recoveries, and the Statute for their Abolition.

In his Private Classes, the Reader will, with the Elementary Class, continue his Course of Real Property Law, using the work of Mr. Joshua Williams as a Text-book; and with the Advanced Class, the Reader will go through Mr. Sandars's work on Uses and Trusts.

JURISPRUDENCE, THE CIVIL LAW, AND INTERNATIONAL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence, the Civil Law, and International Law proposes, in the ensuing Educational Term, to deliver Six Public Lectures upon the following subjects:—

1. The Historical Development of the Roman Law from the times of the Antonines until the composition of the Corpus Juris Civilis.

2. The History of the Laws of Rome, England, and France, relating to the Disposition of Property by Testament.

3. The Effect of Fraud, Duress, and Mistake (dolus malus, metus, error) in vitiating a Contract.

4. Domicil.

In his Private Class, the Reader will continue the Course of Roman Civil Law, with the discussion of the Roman Law of Contracts, using Sandars's Edition of Justinian's Institutes, and the Systema Juris Romani of Mackeldey as Text-books, and contrast it with the Modern French Law upon the same head.

The Reader in his Private Class will also discuss points of International Law, relating to Treaties of Peace, using the work of Wheaton as the Text-book, and referring to the works of the principal modern Jurists, the decisions of the Admiralty and Prize Courts of England and America, the Debates in Parliament, and State Papers relating to the cases under discussion.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, Two Courses of Six Public Lectures, each on the following subjects:—

Elementary Course.

1. The Rise and Progress of our Mercantile Law, with some Notice of the Leading Statutes relating to it.
2. Mercantile Instruments, and the Evidence admissible to explain them.
3. Mercantile Remedies, whether by Action at Law or otherwise.

Advanced Course.

1. The Jurisdiction of Courts of Common Law in regard to Contracts.
2. Contracts, Special or Simple, of ordinary Occurrence, with the Pleadings and Evidence appropriate in Actions thereupon.
3. Contracts of Bailment.

With his Private Class the Reader will examine the above-mentioned subjects in the order indicated, using, with his Elementary Class, Smith's Mercantile Law (by Dowdeswell), and Smith's Leading Cases (5th edition); and with his Advanced Class, Chitty on Contracts, Story on Bailments, and The Precedent of Pleadings, by Messrs. Bullen and Leake, as Text-books for reference.

By order of the Council,

(Signed) WESTBURY, C., Chairman.

Council Chamber, Lincoln's Inn,

Construction of Ships of War in Neutral Ports. The Foreign Enlistment Act, and its Effects.

THE RECTOR AND THE HIGHWAY RATES.—A curious case was brought before the Pickering Bench at their last weekly meeting, which occasioned no small interest. The surveyor of the highways for the parish of Kirbymisperton, Mr. John Cordukes, summoned the rector, the Rev. C. J. Sympsn, and the following members of his flock, viz. Mr. J. Suggett, Mr. J. Hardcastle, and Mr. J. Hardcastle, jun., respectively of Kirbymisperton, for refusing to pay the (alleged) legal rate for the maintenance of the parish highways. The sums claimed were—the rector, 20*l.* 11*s.*; Mr. Suggett, 14*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*; Mr. Hardcastle, 3*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*; and Mr. Hardcastle, jun., 16*l.* 16*s.* Rates proportionate to these charges had been paid by other parishioners, and it was shewn that the rate was duly made, allowed, and published according to law. For the defence, it was shewn that a spiritual guide is not the less a man of the world, it being alleged that the rate sued for was at the rate of 1*s.* in the pound, and was therefore objected to as being 2*d.* in the pound in advance of the maximum figure allowed by the Highway Act, the highest sum allowed being 10*d.* in the pound. The objection was fatal, and the Bench dismissed the whole of the cases.

HOW BURIAL SOCIETIES ARE MANAGED.—The judge of the Liverpool County Court has been engaged in the investigation of the affairs of the St. Patrick's Burial Society, on the suit of Mr. Hugh Caraher. At the last annual meeting of the society, Mr. Caraher was elected as member of the managing committee; but no committee meeting being called, he wrote to the president, complaining of the way in which the society's affairs were conducted. This request of Mr. Caraher was not complied with; but, on the other hand, he was excluded from the committee, on the ground that he had written a communication which was "injurious to the interests of the society." The investigation disclosed some painful and discreditable facts. It appeared that the society has been in existence for many years, and that it has large numbers of members in all parts of the country. Its income amounts to 40,000*l.* a year. In 1849 its affairs reached a crisis, and it became bankrupt. It was, however, revived, when Mr. Treacy, the present secretary, was appointed to take the office, at a salary of 8*s.* per week, but since that time his salary has been increased to 400*l.* a year, with house rent, coals, and gas in addition. It was also shewn that he had recently received the sum of 100*l.* to indemnify him for "extra labour in London." Treacy stated that he had never made any return of his travelling expenses, but was in the habit of placing a certain sum—say 20*l.* in his pocket when he left home, and when he returned he counted how much he had left, and entered the difference as "expenses." It also appeared that several agents of the society had defrauded it to a very considerable extent, but that no steps had been taken to punish them, and that they were still in the employ of the society. Nor did the accounts shew how these deficiencies had been caused. Another point was, that the president (the Rev. Patrick Phelan) had demanded and had received a salary of 100*l.* per annum, though there was no rule authorising such payment; also, it was stated that the printer to the society had received, during the last five years, between 3000*l.* and 4000*l.* It further transpired the trustees were the Rev. Mr. Phelan, Treacy, and a man named Judge; and that Judge, a shoemaker, had acted as medical inspector, and as such had received various payments. A receiver was appointed some time ago, and it was arranged that the case should stand adjourned until a full statement of the monetary affairs of the society could be made. It was agreed also that Caraher should in the meantime be reinstated as a member of the society.

WIMBLEDON COMMON.—The proposed bill for the protection and improvement of Wimbledon Common has been printed. The preamble recites, that the common has been the resort of gipsies; that it is ill-drained and unfit for pasturage; that rights of taking gravel from certain parts of it are exercised by adjoining parishes; that the National Rifle Association have the use of it from the lord of the manor; that the lord of the manor is willing to appropriate the bulk of the common as a public park; that provision for the expenses of such appropriation must be made by selling part of the present area; and that it is expedient certain roads should be diverted, viz. part of the road leading from Stag-lane and the Robin Hood-road, crossing the common. The act constitutes Lord Spencer protector of the park, authorising him to set aside a portion of the common coloured pink on the plan, and inclose it with fences, so as, however, not to interrupt the view from the villas around, and to make walks, drives, and rides in the park, level obstructions, &c., and appoint gatekeepers and park-keepers. The park to be open at six o'clock in the morning, or at sunrise, if after six o'clock, and not to be closed till sunset. The park may be used for any purpose of practical public utility or interest with the consent of the Home Secretary, when money can be claimed for entrance; but political meetings, open-air preachings, and meetings of clubs or benefit societies, are prohibited. Protector to have power of making regulations as to permitting refreshments to be sold in the park and the like; for regulating quarries and pits to be used by the parishes; and for excluding gipsies and tramps. Bye-laws not to be contrary to act, and to be approved by the Home Secretary. Provision is made for compensating those who had common rights. The site of the windmill may be used by Earl Spencer for building a dwelling-house, with grounds. A plan accompanies the bill, in which the land to be sold is coloured blue; but farther sales of land coloured brown and green may be made if money raised is insufficient, the brown to be sold before the green; and if these are insufficient to pay all claims, the claims shall abate proportionably. The map shews that only a strip of land is to be sold. The blue land to be first taken is on the south and west of the park, and the brown and green together only cut off the extreme north-eastern projection in Putney parish, and near to the Chelsea water-works.—Globe.

THE SHIPPING LAW MANUAL: a concise Treatise on the Law governing the Interests of Shipowners, Merchants, Masters, Seamen, and other Persons connected with British Ships. Together with the Acts of Parliament, Edicts, and Precedents relating to the subject. Being especially intended for popular use in Seaport Towns. By W. T. GREENHOW, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"The 'Shipping Law Manual,' by Mr. W. T. Greenhow, brings into a popular shape, and to the latest date, the entire body of legal principles affecting the shipping trade of the country. Like in relation to owners, merchants, masters, and seamen, and is especially adapted for ordinary use by all persons connected with the business of seaport towns. — Times, Jan. 31, 1863.

"The object of the author of this book is to popularise the Law of Merchant Shipping, and to compress within the compass of a single volume all that is necessary to be known by those directly interested in British navigation. It was no easy task to condense and arrange the mass of legislation, so as to make it intelligible to the general reader. But Mr. Greenhow has achieved it, and placed at the disposal of every one connected with shipping a valuable compendium of the Law relating to that branch of industry. — Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 7, 1865.

It is a matter of some interest to trace the gradual extension, or, to speak more correctly, the gradual development, of the principle which regulates the liability of corporate bodies to actions of tort. It may, perhaps, be contended, that in order to meet the justice of particular cases, and to saddle the damages on the party best able to pay them, the Courts have, of late years, exceeded the limits of the original principle, and laid down a new rule of liability; the effect of which is, that a corporation is quite as liable to be sued for torts, whatever their nature, as private individuals are. According to the older authorities, a corporation was liable for such wrongs as were committed by its agents innocently—that is, without any evil motive or evil state of mind being a necessary ingredient in the tort; and even then, unless it was some trifling act, or some act of every day occurrence, it was necessary to prove that the corporate body had authorised it by their common seal. Thus, in Yarborough v. The Bank of England (16 East, 6), where the Bank of England was sued in trover for detaining bank notes, Lord Ellenborough, in his very elaborate judgment, cites the following dictum:—"A corporation cannot do a tort but by their writing under their common seal." (Per Fitzjames, Justice, Borough Corporations, pl. 34). And in the case before him, he says that, after verdict, it must be presumed that a competent conversion was proved; and if it be essential to such conversion, that there should have been an authority from the company under seal to detain the notes on their behalf, it must be presumed that such authority was proved. His Lordship, however, clearly was of opinion, that the detention of the notes in the case before him rendered the Bank of England liable, although they had not authorised it by their common seal. But as we have observed, a conversion of goods and chattels or a distress may be wrongful in law, and yet involve no evil motive—no malicious intent—nor is it suggested by Lord Ellenborough in the judgment in the above case, that a corporate body could be liable for torts of that nature. But as the number of trading and railway companies has increased, so the notion that they were legally liable for torts of every kind committed by their servants, has become more and more ventilated, and at length established. Thus, in Stevens v. The Midland Railway Company (23 L. J., Ex., 828; 18 Jur., part 1, p. 932), the company was sued for the act of their superintendent of police, in criminally prosecuting the plaintiff, which he had done without the authority of the company. We will quote verbatim the words of Baron Alderson: "The directors are liable if they direct their servant to institute a prosecution maliciously; but they are not liable constructively for an act like the present, of which they knew nothing. The company cannot be considered to have acted malò animo, as they have no animus. The directors are responsible for the act, but not for the animus. The action for malicious prosecution depends on the animus." And his Lordship further observed: "An action for a malicious prosecution cannot be sustained against a corporation, as such an action requires the existence of malice, and a corporation cannot have malice." His Lordship broadly lays down the rule, that where the motive is an ingredient in the tort, a corporation cannot be liable. Baron Martin, however, it will be seen, advisedly declined to give his opinion on the point.

The point was again raised before the Court of Common Pleas in the case of Lawson v. The Bank of London (25 L. J., C. P., 188; 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 716), where the bank was sued for fraudulently establishing their bank under the name of the Bank of London, in order that it might be taken for a bank of the same name previously established by the plaintiffs. It was argued, on the one hand, that the defendants, a corporation, could not be liable for a fraudulent intent; and on the other, that a trading corporation was different from a municipal body, to which bodies only the older authorities applied. The case was decided upon another point, and the principal question left in doubt. Willes, J., observes—"I am by no means prepared to say that a corporation might not have been liable, as it has capacity to do the act and to receive notice; but it is unnecessary to express any opinion on that point." Thus, it is clear that at this time the extent to which corporations were liable for torts, in which the question of animus is involved, was, at all events, doubtful. No authority could be produced to decide the question; and some of the judges had not apparently formed an opinion upon it.

The next case to which we would call attention is that of Green v. The London General Omnibus Company (29 L. J., C. P., 13; 6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 228), where the company was sued for maliciously obstructing the plaintiff in driving his omnibuses. To the declaration there was a demurrer, so that the fact that the company's servants did, by their orders, obstruct the plaintiff's omnibuses, was admitted on the record. But the contention was, that the directors or others who actually gave the order were the parties liable, not the corporation, who could not be guilty of a malicious intent. The Court, however, decided that the company was liable, one ground of their judgment being, "that the whole of the acts charged against the defendants are acts connected with the driving of their vehicles, and that as the defendants were incorporated for the purpose of driving omnibuses, the actual things done by the defendants were acts done within the purpose of their incorporation." We confess we do not understand this ground of the judgment. The defendants were incorporated to drive omnibuses, but they were not incorporated to obstruct those of other people. Probably the main ground of the judgment is that subsequently stated:—"I may add, as an additional reason for our decision, the inconvenience to the public that would arise if we were to hold, that these companies, incorporated for the purposes of trade, had a restricted limitation put upon their liability by reason of such incorporation, and were exempt from responsibility because they intentionally wronged the public. We think it extremely important where such companies admit that they have, in fact, intentionally committed a wrong, that the public should have a remedy against them, and not be driven to an action against their servants and others whom they have employed, and who may be entirely incapable of giving the recompense which the law may award." Now, it may be reasonable and just that companies should be liable in such cases, but the question rather seems to be, whether a court of law can say, that whatever is reasonable and just is law; and whether the convenience of the public shall be allowed to have weight in a judgment. If directors have ordered their servants to commit a tort, they are personally liable, and probably competent, to satisfy the damages. This case is, at all events, a great development of the principle of liability, and seems to destroy the notion that a corporation cannot have an animus, and cannot be capable of a malicious intent.

The last case with which we will trouble our readers is the recent one of Stiles v. The Cardiff Steam Navigation Company (10 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1199). There the company was sued for keeping a dog, knowing that he was accustomed to bite. Here the scienter was the gist of the action, and it appears to have been almost admitted on the part of the defendants that the company could know by their agent; and the several judges express the clearest opinions on the point. Crompton, J.—"It is not to be contended that the defendants, being a corporation, are, therefore, incapable of knowledge in such a matter. Such a doctrine would be very pernicious." And Shee, J.—"As to corporations, there is no difference between them and individuals with respect to questions of this kind."

Thus, it would appear, that at the present time the liability of a corporate body for a tort is as extensive as that of a private individual; and that where evil intent or knowledge are necessarily a component part of the tort, the intent or knowledge of the servants of the corporation is the intent or knowledge of the latter. This may be quite fair and reasonable; but we think it would be difficult to maintain that it is no more than a development, caused by the changes in society, and in the mode of transacting business, of the original principle which governed the liability of corporations.

In the 14th line of the leading article of our last number, "count" has been printed instead of "correct." We take this opportunity of expressing our regret that Mr. Scott should have fancied that our strictures on his reports were suggested by any personal feeling. We know that Mr. Scott has many friends, and we do not know that he has a single personal enemy; but he must be as painfully aware as his subscribers are, that his reports amply illustrate the evils which flow from the present system of unrestricted reporting. Under a different system he would doubtless report to the satisfaction of every one. We have criticised the existing authorised reports with more freedom, because we are satisfied that no change can be made which will injuriously affect the vested interests of the reporters; but, however that may be, no vested interests can be allowed to stand in the way of any reform which is necessary for the due administration of the law.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Your mode of dissecting the last part of Mr. Beavan's Reports, if applied to any of the regular reports, would, I apprehend, have a similar result; for, until the character and position of the reporter be raised, he will not be competent, or not feel himself at liberty, either entirely to ignore a lower standard of legal knowledge than that to which, perhaps, he himself has attained, or materially to abbreviate a written judgment. If Mr. Beavan were appointed official reporter of the court to which he is attached, and had in that capacity an adequate stipend, I have no doubt that his reports would contain all decisions that were worthy of being reported, and no more. How can any man be expected to exercise a wise discretion, when he knows that rival reporters will attribute his silence to a negligent performance of the duties of his office? Mr. George Sweet, one of the committee on law reporting, very properly states, that an unknown decision cannot be valuable or important; but the principle which, in these later times, is attempted to be deduced from that self-evident proposition is, that reporters ought to be legion, instead of what, I submit, is the logical deduction, that the discretion of reporting ought to be limited, and placed in the ablest possible hands. It is of much greater importance to the Bar, and the public generally, that what is called "the unwritten law" should be in a comprehensive form, and capable of being easily and rapidly ascertained, than that precedent should be diffused and scattered through a myriad of channels, none of which can really lay claim to superior purity or authority. Doubtless, the present effort of Mr. Daniel is meritorious in this respect—that it admits the evil of an unlimited discretion in reporting, and attempts to remedy it; nor can I understand, that the report of the committee was adopted in any other light by the recent meeting of the Bar. But is an unpaid council a proper body in which such a discretion ought to be vested? Even if the Inns of Court could obtain an exclusive charter for reporting decisions, I do not think it possible that they could practically exercise such functions as Lord St. Leonards and Mr. Daniel would invest them with. Reporting is, or ought to be, a privilege of the Bar exercisable for the benefit of themselves and the public generally. Decisions used to be reported, if I may use the expression, con amore, by the ablest lawyers and judges; it is now, indeed, too often a labour of love, in which the inexperienced engage; but I do not hesitate to say, that a time is at hand when really authorised reports alone will be citable in courts of justice, and that no indecent rush of reporters to the platform, for the purpose of advocating their own peculiar views or interests, with as little respect for the Bar particularly as for the public generally, will be able to avert that coming event. As I understand the plan proposed by Mr. George Sweet, the council that he suggests would simply appoint and dismiss reporters, and manage financial matters. As for myself, I should certainly prefer the right of appointment to be vested in the Crown; but, with reference to the question of finance, I agree that the accounts of the official reporters ought to be audited by the Inns of Court. I cannot but think, that if Mr. Daniel's figures are correct, based, as they are, on so limited an amount of patronage, that an exclusive system would not fail to pay just and adequate stipends to the reporters, and to supply the practising bar with copies of the reports at a reasonable price. I repeat, as I have observed elsewhere, that it is a matter in which all the members of the Bar, whether practising or not, ought to take a share, and the practising bar ought, as such, to be supplied with authorised reports at due intervals. The judges have, so to speak, been too much nursed of late. Let them, for the future, not to speak irreverently, run alone. In this connection, I am reminded of once hearing Sir John Stuart say, when counsel was about to cite a case in proof of something self-evident: "O, you need not trouble—the will itself is your best case." How often does it not happen that justice is impeded, instead of furthered, by this chaotic mine of precedent, from which the indefatigable lawyer digs something favourable to any kind of contention! An unskilful reporter represents, perhaps, as a solemn decision, a decree that has been taken by consent, or omits from his statement of facts an important element of the case, or misrepresents the result altogether. Surely, such cases are more likely to occur when the number of reporters is legion, and unauthorised, than when limited and authorised! Hence it is, that a judge often has to refine his judgments to the nicest point, in order to avoid collision with something that, perhaps, was never decided, or, relying on the error of some self-constituted reporter, adds another item to the ever-increasing body of bad law. As it seems that the Bar will not rebuke the presumption of Mr. Daniel, I trust that the judges will do so in their response to the communication from the committee, and I think they cannot do otherwise. They admitted the citation of the irregular reports, because there was an absolute want, and there is the same absolute want now; moreover, Parliament had not, and has not, hitherto defined an authorised report, which, as at present defined by Mr. Beavan and others, means authorised by the judge, and I think that is the present footing of the authorised reporters, a footing which the judges are bound in honour to maintain; but it is a definition which Lord Westbury expressly repudiates. I feel strongly that the Bar and the public would be deeply indebted to the present Lord Chancellor, if, in one of his luminous speeches, he would set us all right in this matter, and inaugurate, in this nineteenth century of enlightenment and progress, a really authorised series of law reports.

Your obedient servant,
G. L.

LAW CLASSES.

ARTICLED CLERKS' DEBATING SOCIETY.—At an ordinary meeting of this society, held at the Whittington Club, Arundel-street, Strand, on Wednesday last, Mr. Fraser moved, and Mr. B. Davis seconded, "That in the opinion of this meeting it is expedient that this society should express by letter their approval of the memorial which is now in course of preparation, and shortly to be presented to the Council of the Incorporated Law Society on the subject of law classes." To this Mr. Drummond moved, as an amendment, and Mr. Theodore Lumley seconded, "That this society, while appreciating the utility of law classes in connection with some recognised legal institutions, and while gratefully acknowledging the disinterested and able efforts of Mr. Fraser in bringing the subject before the profession, considers that the formation of such law classes in connection with the society (as best representing the articulated clerks of England and Wales), would be attended with the most beneficial result to the class for which they are intended." After a very spirited discussion, the votes of the meeting were taken, when the amendment was negatived by a majority of one, and the motion subsequently carried by a majority of nine.

Whereas an act was passed in the 9 Geo. 4, c. 24, intituled "An Act to repeal certain Acts, and to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes in Ireland:" and whereas it is expedient that the said act should be amended, so far as relates to the hours thereby prescribed for keeping open the offices of public notaries in Ireland: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. From and after the passing of this act, so much of the said act of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 24, as requires that all public notaries practising in Ireland shall keep their offices open from six o'clock in the afternoon until nine o'clock in the evening of any day, shall be, and the same is, hereby repealed.

2. From and after the passing of this act, it shall not be necessary for any notary public in Ireland, or any person for him, at his house or office, to be in attendance after the hour of six o'clock in the afternoon of any day, in order to receive payment of any bill or note; but every such bill or note whereof payment shall not be made, or duly or legally tendered, at or before such hour of six o'clock in the afternoon, shall be considered to be and shall be dishonoured, to all intents and purposes; and thereupon such notary public shall and may note or protest the same for non-payment, any law, statute, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sect. 1. That all the provisions of the said acts (except such as authorise the contributions of unions and parishes in the counties of Lancaster, Chester, and Derby in aid of any other union therein) shall be extended and apply to the expenditure for the quarter of the year ending at Lady-day in this year.

2. The power of the Poor-law Board to issue any order under this act shall determine on the 1st July next.

3. All acts referred to, and this act, may be cited and described, for all purposes, as "The Union Relief Aid Acts, 1862, 1863, 1864."

CAP. XI.

An Act to apply the Sum of Fifteen Millions out of the Consolidated Fund to the Service of the Year 1864. [28th April, 1864.]

CAP. XII.

An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Warehousing of British Spirits. [28th April, 1864.]

Sect. 1. British spirits in duty-free warehouse may be removed to a separate room to be bottled for exportation or for ship's stores.

2. How spirits shall be bottled and packed.
3. Bottled spirits may be removed to a ship or to customs warehouse as spirits in casks.
4. Distiller may reduce spirits with water in a warehouse specially approved for that purpose, to any strength at which he might lawfully send the same out of his stock.
5. Separate room to be provided for racking duty-paid spirits.
6. Allowance upon the deficiency arising from the vatting of spirits in warehouse increased to one per cent.
7. Duty to be paid on quantity of spirits actually delivered from warehouse, where no fraudulent or improper deficiency.
8. Where any deficiency beyond natural waste is found in spirits in warehouse, the duty on the quantity originally warehoused to be paid immediately.
9. Spirits fraudulently concealed, abstracted, or removed from warehouse to be forfeited, and distiller or proprietor of warehouse to forfeit 200*l*.
10. Distiller or proprietor of spirits or warehouse opening or gaining access to warehouse, except in the presence of an officer, to forfeit 500*l*.

14. Bonds to be given in form approved by commissioners.
15. Penalties to be recovered as other excise penalties.
16. Sects. 129, 132, 133, 134, and 147 of the act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 114, repealed.

CAP. XIII.

An Act to further extend the Time for making Inrolments under the Act passed in the Twenty-fourth Year of the Reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Law relating to the Conveyance of Lands for Charitable Uses," and otherwise to amend the said Law.

[13th May, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Time for inrolment of deeds and assurances extended to 17th May, 1866.
2. Act to apply to separate deeds or instruments referred to.
 3. Provision where original deed is lost.
 4. Valuable consideration payable as rent to be equivalent to a consideration in money actually paid within the stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36.

Recites 24 & 25 Vict. c. 9, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 17.

Sect. 1. The inrolment of every deed, insurance, and instrument which shall be inrolled before the 17th May, 1866, shall, for the purposes of the said recited acts, or either of them, have the same force and effect which it would have had if such inrolment had taken place within the said time by the said acts respectively limited.

2. This act shall be taken to apply as well to cases where such separate deed or instrument as is mentioned in the 4th section of the said second act shall be or shall have been executed after, as to cases where it may have been executed before the passing of the said first act; provided only, that if not already executed, it be executed within six calendar months next after the passing of this act.

3. And whereas it may be impossible in some cases to inrol the original deed creating a charitable trust by reason of the same having been lost or destroyed by time or accident, but nevertheless the trusts of such charity may sufficiently appear by some subsequent deed appointing new trustees, or otherwise reciting the trusts created by the original deed: be it enacted, that in every such case it shall be lawful for any trustee or other person interested in such charitable trust to apply by summons in a summary way to the Court of Chancery for an order authorising the inrolment of such subsequent deed; and if the court shall be satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise, that such original deed has been lost or destroyed by time or accident, but that the trusts thereof sufficiently appear by such subsequent deed, then it shall be lawful for the said court to make an order authorising the inrolment of such subsequent deed; and the inrolment thereof shall have the same force and effect as the inrolment of the original deed would have had if the same had not been lost or destroyed as aforesaid.

4. Every full and bonâ fide consideration within the meaning of the 1st section of the said first act which shall consist either wholly or partly of a rent or other annual payment reserved or made payable to the vendor or grantor, or to any other person, shall, for the purposes of the statute passed in the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, be as valid and have the same force and effect as if such consideration had been a sum of money actually paid at or before the making of such conveyance without fraud or collusion.

CAP. XIV.

An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders under the Land Drainage Act, 1861. [13th May, 1864.]

CAP. XV.

An Act for making better and further Provision for the more efficient Dispatch of Business in the High Court of Chancery. [13th May, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Appointment of additional chief clerk and assistant clerks to the Master of the Rolls.
2. Clerks so appointed may be transferred to any other judge.
 3. Vacancies may be supplied.
 4. Duties, &c. of the chief and junior clerks.
 5. Duties, &c. of assistant clerk.

Recites 23 & 24 Vict. c. 149, and that assistance of John William Hawkins and John Hockley is required.

Sect. 1. From and after the passing of this act, the said John William Hawkins shall become, and he is hereby appointed, additional chief clerk to the Master of the Rolls and his successors in office; and the said John Hockley shall become, and he is hereby appointed, a junior clerk to such additional chief clerk; and it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls to appoint one other junior clerk and one assistant clerk to such additional chief clerk.

2. The Lord Chancellor, with the advice and concurrence of the judge to whom such additional chief clerk and other clerks may for the time being be attached, may transfer from time to time such additional chief clerk and other clerks to any other judge of the said court during such time as he shall think fit.

3. On any vacancy in such office of junior clerk or assistant clerk during the continuance in office of the said John William Hawkins under this act, it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls or Vice-Chancellor to whom such additional chief clerk and other clerks at the time of such vacancy happening shall be attached to supply such vacancy: provided always, that in case a new judge shall be appointed in the Court of Chancery, the said John William Hawkins, or other person appointed an additional chief clerk under this act, and the junior and assistant clerks of such chief clerk, shall be transferred to and become the clerks of such judge.

4. Such of the provisions contained in the act of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, as amended by the act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 134, and by the said recited act, as relate to the qualification for and removal from office, striking off the roll, tenure of office, attendances, duties, powers, prohibitions, prosecutions, penalties, and punishments, salaries, and annuities, of and respecting the chief clerks and junior clerks by the first two of such acts authorised to be appointed, are hereby extended and applied to and in the case of the chief clerk and junior clerks appointed and to be appointed under this act, so far as the same are consistent with the provisions herein otherwise contained.

5. Every assistant clerk appointed or who shall be appointed under this act shall hold his office at the pleasure of the judge to whose court he shall be attached, and shall be under the control of such judge, and attend at such places, during such times, and for such hours in each day, and perform such duties as such judge shall from time to time direct, and shall receive by way of salary for the performance of his duties such annual sum as the Lord Chancellor and the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall from time to time fix and determine, and such salary shall grow due and be paid in the manner and out of the fund mentioned in sect. 48 of the act of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87.

CAP. XVI.

An Act to confirm the Appointment of Henry Pendock St. George Tucker, Esq., as One of the Judges of Her Majesty's High Court of Bombay, and to establish the Validity of certain Proceedings therein. [13th May, 1864.]

CAP. XVII.

An Act for the Abolition of Vestry Cess in Ireland; and for other Purposes relating thereto. [13th May, 1864.]

Sect. 1. No vestry in Ireland to levy rate after commencement of act.

2. Powers of vestry with respect to deserted children to cease.

3. The acts for relief of destitute poor in Ireland to apply to destitute deserted children.

4. Every vestry clerk, cess collector, beadle, engine keeper, &c., deprived of any salary or emolument by this act to be compensated.

5. Parish officers deprived of salary, fees, &c., to be compensated.

6. Acts and parts of acts in schedule repealed.

CAP. XVIII.

An Act to grant certain Duties of Customs and Inland Revenue. [13th May, 1864.]

Sect. 1. There shall be charged, collected, and paid, for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, the several rates and duties of customs, excise, stamps, and income tax, respectively specified and contained in the several schedules marked respectively (A.), (B.), (C.), and (D.) to this act annexed, and there shall be allowed the several drawbacks specified and contained in the said Schedule (A.); and the said rates, duties, and drawbacks shall respectively take effect at or from the respective times, and shall continue to be charged, collected, paid, and allowed for and during the periods respectively specified or mentioned in that behalf in this act or in the said schedules, and where no time is so specified for the commencement thereof the same shall commence and take effect from and after the passing of this act, and where no period is so specified or limited for the duration thereof the same shall continue to be charged, collected, paid, and allowed respectively until Parliament shall otherwise order; and the said several schedules shall be deemed to be part of this act.

2. Provisions of former acts to apply to this act.

Customs.

3. Commissioners of Customs to provide standard samples of sugar for assessing duty.

4. Sect. 4 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 97, repealed.

Excise Licenses.

5. Occasional licenses may be granted to persons who have taken out licenses under the 23 & 24 Vict. cc. 27 and 107 (refreshment houses and wine retailers); under the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 85 (beer retailers); and under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 81 (tobacco retailers).

6. Tea license at reduced rate to be granted only on overseer's certificate of rating.

7. Penalty on overseer, &c. refusing to grant certificate.

8. Half-yearly licenses may be granted to hawkers.

Stamp Duties.

9. For the purposes of this act with respect to the duty on insurances against loss or damage by fire, "stock-in-trade" shall be understood and deemed to mean goods, wares, and merchandise in the possession of the manufacturer thereof for sale, or in the possession of any manufacturer as materials to be used for the purpose, or in the process of any manufacture, or in the possession of any trader for sale in the course of his trade, or in the possession of any person on behalf of such manufacturer or trader, or in the possession of a licensed pawnbroker, being goods received by him in pledge.

10. In every policy by which any insurance from loss or damage by fire shall be made or renewed upon any stock-in-trade, machinery, implements, or utensils, subject to the reduced rate of yearly per-centage-duty by this act imposed, such stock-in-trade, machinery, implements, and utensils, and the sum or sums insured thereon, shall be specified and set forth separately from all other property on which any insurance shall be made by the same policy, and the quarterly accounts required by law to be kept and rendered by persons, corporations, and companies insuring against fire shall contain a separate and distinct account of all such insurances as aforesaid, and of the sums insured thereby respectively, and all other particulars relating thereto required by law to be specified or contained in such quarterly accounts: provided that where in any policy existing at the time of the passing of this act property insured subject to the said reduced rate of duty shall not be separately and distinctly specified as herein required, it shall be lawful to distinguish the same and the sum or sums insured thereon by any memorandum to be written or indorsed in or upon such policy.

11. Whereas by an act passed in the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, certain ad valorem stamp duties were granted and made payable under the head of "settlement" in the schedule thereto in respect of any definite and certain principal sum or sums of money, and any definite and certain share or shares in any of the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, or in the stocks and funds of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of the Bank of Ireland, or of the East India Company, or of the South Sea Company, or of any other company or corporation: and whereas it is expedient to explain and amend the said act as hereinafter mentioned; be it enacted, that the said duties so granted and made payable as last aforesaid shall be deemed to extend to and shall be chargeable upon or in respect of any definite and certain principal sum or sums of money of any denomination or currency, whether British, foreign, or colonial, and any definite and certain share or shares in the stocks or funds of any foreign or colonial Government, state, corporation, or company whatsoever, as well as upon or in respect of the shares, stocks, and funds specified in the said last-mentioned schedule.

12. And where any principal sum of money secured or contracted for by or which may become due or payable upon any bond, debenture, policy of insurance, covenant, or contract, shall be settled or agreed to be settled, or such bond, debenture, policy, covenant, or contract, shall be settled, or assigned or transferred by way of settlement, or shall be agreed so to be, then and in any of such cases the same shall be deemed to be a settlement of such principal sum of money, and shall be chargeable with the said ad valorem stamp duties on the amount thereof accordingly: provided always, that where the subject of any settlement shall be a policy of insurance, then, if there shall not be any certain covenant, contract, or provision made for keeping up such policy, or for paying the premiums which may become payable in that behalf, the said ad valorem duty shall be chargeable only on the value of such policy at the date of such settlement.

13. And where the subject of any settlement chargeable with the said duties shall be any share or shares in any such stocks or funds as aforesaid, or any sum or sums of money secured by any foreign or colonial bond, debenture, or other security bearing a marketable value in the English market, then the value of such share or shares, and of such bond, debenture, or other security respectively, shall be ascertained and determined by the average selling price thereof on the day or on either of the ten days preceding the day of the date of the deed or instrument of settlement, or if no sale shall have taken place within such ten days, then according to the average selling price thereof on the day of the last preceding sale, and the said ad valorem duties shall be chargeable on such settlement in respect of the value so ascertained and determined; and the value of any sum or sums of money expressed in coin of a foreign or colonial denomination or currency shall be determined by the current rate of exchange on the day of the date of the deed or instrument of settlement, and the said ad valorem duties shall be chargeable in respect of the value so determined as last aforesaid.

14. The stamp duty by this act imposed on a voting paper, as described in Schedule (C.) to this act, may be denoted by an adhesive stamp, in like manner as the stamp duty on an instrument appointing a proxy; and all provisions and regulations relating to the particulars to be inserted in such last-mentioned instrument, or to the cancelling or obliterating an adhesive stamp affixed thereto, and all penalties for any neglect or omission to comply with any such provisions or regulations, or for making or signing any such instrument on paper not duly stamped, or for voting or attempting to vote under any such instrument not duly stamped, shall be deemed to apply, and shall be observed and enforced, mutatis mutandis, in relation to any such voting paper as aforesaid.

Income Tax.

15. And whereas, under and by virtue of the 40th section of the act passed in the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, persons liable to the payment of rent, yearly interest, or any annuity or other annual payment therein mentioned, are entitled and authorised, on making such payment, to deduct and retain thereout the amount of the rate of income tax which shall be payable at the time when such payment becomes due: be it enacted, that the persons liable to and making any such payment as aforesaid shall be entitled, and are hereby authorised, to deduct and retain thereout the amount of the rate, or a proportionate amount of the several rates, of income tax which were chargeable by law upon or in respect of such rent, interest, annuity, or other annual payment, or the source thereof, during the period through which the same was accruing due, anything in the said recited act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SCHEDULE (C.)

Containing the Duties of Stamps granted by this Act in lieu of the Stamp Duties now chargeable on the several Instruments, Matters, and Things in this Schedule mentioned.

Fire Insurance.

In lieu of the yearly per-centage duty now chargeable for or in respect of any insurance from loss or damage by fire only, which shall be made or renewed on or after the 25th June, 1864, of or upon any goods, wares, or merchandises, being stock-in-trade, or of or upon any machinery, fixtures, implements, or utensils used for the purpose of any manufacture or trade, there shall be charged and paid yearly a duty at and after the rate of 1s. 6d. per annum for every 100*l.* insured; and when any such insurance as aforesaid shall be made or renewed at any time between the 22nd April, 1864, and the said 25th June, for any period of time extending beyond the said last-mentioned day, there shall be charged and paid for and in respect of the time intervening between the making or renewing of the said insurance and the said 25th June, the yearly per-centage duty at and after the rate chargeable on the said 22nd April, and for and in respect of any subsequent period, including the said 25th June, the rate of duty chargeable according to this resolution; and no return or allowance of duty, except at and after the last-mentioned rate, shall be made in respect of time unexpired, or otherwise, on any such insurance as aforesaid which shall have been made or renewed before the said 22nd April, 1864.

SCHEDULE (D.)

Containing the Rates and Duties of Income Tax granted by this Act.

For one year commencing on the 6th April, 1864, for and in respect of all property, profits, and gains mentioned or described as chargeable in the act passed in the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, for granting to her Majesty duties on profits arising from property, professions, trades, and offices, the following rates and duties; (that is to say),

For every 20s. of the annual value or amount of all such property, profits, and gains (except those chargeable under Schedule (B.) of the said act), the rate or duty of 6d.

And for and in respect of the occupation of lands, tenements, hereditaments, and heritages chargeable under Schedule (B.) of the said act, for every 20s. of the annual value thereof—

In England the rate or duty of 3d.:

And in Scotland and Ireland respectively the rate or duty of 2½d.:

Subject to the provisions contained in sect. 3 of an act passed in the last session of Parliament, c. 22, for the exemption of persons whose whole income from every source is under 100l. a year, and the relief of those whose income is under 200l. a year.

CAP. XIX.

An Act to enable Joint-stock Companies carrying on Business in Foreign Countries to have Official Seals to be used in such Countries. [13th May, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Short title.

2. Power to companies to have an official seal.

3. Power to companies to appoint agents abroad to affix seals.

4. As to the duration of powers granted under sect. 3 of this act.

5. Person affixing seal to document to certify the date when so affixed.

6. Companies not to exercise powers of act unless authorised.

7. Sect. 55 of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, not repealed.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Companies Seals Act, 1864."

2. Any company, under the Companies Act, 1862, whose objects require or comprise the transaction of business, as hereinbefore mentioned, in foreign countries, may cause to be prepared an official seal for and to be used in any place, district, or territory situate out of the United Kingdom in which the business of the company shall be carried on, and every such official seal may and shall be a fac-simile of or as nearly as practicable a fac-simile of the common seal of the company, with the exception that on the face thereof shall be inscribed the name of each and every place, district, or territory in and for which it is to be used: provided that it shall be lawful for any such company as aforesaid from time to time to break up and renew any official seal or seals, and to vary the limits within which it is intended to be used.

3. Every company having or using any such official seal as is authorised by this act may from time to time, by any instrument or instruments in writing under the common seal of the company, empower any agent or agents specially appointed for the purpose, or any local agent, board, committee, manager, or commissioner appointed under the provisions of the articles of association of such company, in any place, district, or territory situate out of the United Kingdom where the business of the company shall for the time being be carried on, to affix such official seal to any deed, contract, or other instrument to which the company is or shall be made a party in such place, district, or territory, and no other order of the company or the board of directors thereof shall be necessary to authorise any such seal to be affixed to any deed, contract, or other instrument.

4. Every power granted under the last preceding section shall, as between the company, their successors and assigns, on the one hand, and the person or persons dealing with the agent or agents, board, committee, manager, or commissioner named in the instrument conferring the power, and all parties claiming through or under such person or persons, on the other hand, continue in force during the period, if any, mentioned in the instrument conferring the power, or if no power be there mentioned, then until notice of the revocation or determination of the power shall have been given to such person or persons as aforesaid.

5. Whenever any such official seal as aforesaid shall be affixed to any document, the person affixing the same shall, by writing under his hand, and written on the document to which the seal may have been affixed, certify the date when and the place where the same was affixed; and any document to which any such seal shall have been duly affixed within the district or territory or place the name whereof is inscribed on such seal shall bind the company in the same way and to the same extent, and have the same force and effect, as if it had been duly sealed with the common seal of the company.

6. The powers given by this act shall be exercised by such companies only as are or shall be expressly authorised to exercise the same by their articles of association, or a special resolution passed according to the provisions of the Companies Act, 1862, and shall be exercised by such companies subject to any directions or restrictions in their articles of association, or the special resolutions contained.

7. Nothing in this act contained shall operate to repeal the provisions of the 55th section of the Companies Act, 1862; but such section shall continue in force, and all acts done or to be done thereunder shall be as valid and effectual as if this act had not been passed.

CAP. XX.

An Act to remove certain Restrictions on the Negotiation of Promissory Notes and Bills of Exchange under a limited Sum in Ireland. [13th May, 1864.]

Sect. 1. So much of stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 37, as prohibits or restrains the negotiation in Ireland of notes and bills under 5l. repealed.

2. Term of this act.

Sect. 1. From and after the passing of this act, so much and such parts of an act passed in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 37, as prohibits the drawing, making, and issuing, or restrains or imposes any penalty for or on account of the publishing, uttering, or negotiating in Ireland of any promissory or other note (not being a note payable to bearer on demand), bill of exchange, draft, or undertaking in writing, being negotiable or transferable, for the payment of 20s., or above that sum and less than 5l., or on which 20s., or above that sum and less than 5l., shall remain undischarged, made, drawn, or indorsed in any other manner than is directed by the said act, or which requires or directs that all such notes, bills, drafts, or undertakings as aforesaid which shall be issued in Ireland, shall be made, drawn, or indorsed according to the forms contained in the schedules to the said act, shall be, and the same is and are, hereby repealed.

2. This act shall continue in force for two years, and until the end of the next ensuing session of Parliament.

25. Power to make Orders in Council.

26. Orders in Council to be gazetted, &c.

27. Commencement of act.

Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited as "The Naval Agency and Distribution Act, 1864."

2. In this act—

The term "the Lords of the Admiralty," means the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom, or the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral:

The term "the High Court of Admiralty," means the High Court of Admiralty of England:

The term "ship of war," includes vessel of war:

The term "officers and crew," includes all flag officers, commanders, and other officers, engineers, seamen, marines, soldiers, and others on board any of her Majesty's ships of war.

3. Any ship or vessel belonging to her Majesty, and in actual service (other than a ship of war), may be declared by the Lords of the Admiralty to be a ship of war for the purposes of this act: and all the provisions of this act shall thereupon apply to such ship or vessel, and shall continue so to apply as long as she then continues in actual service, but no longer.

Appointment of Ship's Agent.

4. Each of her Majesty's ships of war shall at all times while in commission have, for the purposes of this act, an agent, styled the ship's agent, to be appointed in the first instance as soon as may be after the ship is put in commission, and afterwards, from time to time, as a vacancy in the office or other occasion may require.

5. The ship's agent shall be appointed from time to time at pleasure by the commanding officer of the ship for the time being, by an instrument signed and attested in the form given in the schedule to this act.

6. Any such instrument shall not have effect unless and until it is filed in the registry of the High Court of Admiralty, having been previously registered in the office of the Accountant-General of the Navy.

An official copy of any such instrument under the seal of the High Court of Admiralty shall be conclusive evidence thereof.

7. A person holding any office or employment in her Majesty's service or under the Crown, or a proctor, attorney, or solicitor, shall not be capable of being a ship's agent.

If any person being a ship's agent accepts any such office or employment, or becomes a proctor, attorney, or solicitor, his appointment as ship's agent shall be thereby vacated.

8. A partnership body, not incorporated, may be appointed a ship's agent; and in that case the partners for the time being, or any one or more of them, may act as the agent; and any change of partners shall not affect the appointment.

The names of the partners shall, at the time of appointment, and from time to time on any change happening, be registered in the office of the Accountant-General of the Navy, and in the registry of the High Court of Admiralty.

9. The appointment of the ship's agent shall not be affected by a change of the commanding officer of the ship.

10. The ship's agent shall at all times have an office or place of business within five miles of the General Post-office, London.

11. The ship's agent shall be subject to the jurisdiction and authority of the High Court of Admiralty as if he were an officer of the court, and in case of any neglect or misconduct on his part shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

Duties of Ship's Agent.

12. It shall be the duty of the ship's agent, by himself or by a proper sub-agent appointed and remunerated by him, to take or cause or procure to be taken all steps and proceedings, and do or cause or procure to be done all things, that may be necessary or proper to be taken or done for any purpose on behalf or in the name of the ship or of the officers and crew thereof, or any of them, in the several cases following:—

In case of salvage services rendered to any ship or cargo, or otherwise, within the meaning of the enactments for the time being in force relating to merchant shipping:

In case of any breach of any law respecting national character or otherwise relating to merchant shipping:

In case of any seizure for breach of any law relating to the customs:

In case of any seizure or capture under any act relating to the abolition of the slave trade:

In case of any matter arising out of an attack on or engagement with persons alleged to be pirates, afloat or on shore:

In case of any capture, recapture, or destruction of any ship, goods, or thing in time of war or hostilities:

In case of any special service or other matter in respect whereof any grant, reward, or remuneration is payable.

Distribution of Salvage, Bounty, Prize, and other Money.

13. Where in any of the several cases aforesaid any money is distributable among the officers and crew of any of her Majesty's ships of war, the costs, charges, and expenses of the officers and crew and of the ship's agent, and all other (if any) costs, charges, or expenses properly chargeable against that money, shall be paid thereout before distribution thereof, all such costs, charges, and expenses being first taxed and allowed by the proper officer of the court having jurisdiction in the case, and if there is no such court then by the registrar of the High Court of Admiralty.

14. In the several cases aforesaid, money distributable among the officers and crew of any of her Majesty's ships of war, so far as full provision respecting the distribution thereof is not made by or under any act of Parliament other than this act, shall be distributed under the direction of the Lords of the Admiralty in the shares in that behalf specified in any royal proclamation or order in council.

15. The several shares of any such money as aforesaid shall be paid to the persons entitled thereto in such manner, and subject and according to such restrictions, conditions, and provisions, as may from time to time be directed by Order in Council.

Any assignment, sale, or contract of or relating to any such money as aforesaid, payable in respect of the services of any petty officer or seaman, non-commissioned officer of marines or marine, other than such as may be made or entered into under the authority of and in conformity with any such Order in Council, shall be void.

16. All bills, orders, receipts, and other instruments drawn, given, or made under the authority or in pursuance of any such Order in Council by, to, or upon any officer or person in the service of her Majesty or of the Lords of the Admiralty, shall be exempt from stamp duty.

17. All forfeited and unclaimed shares and balances of prize money, and a per-centage of 5*l.* in every 100*l.* out of the proceeds of all prizes, and out of all grants to the royal navy and marines, and out of all bounty money, and also out of all other money distributable in the several cases aforesaid among the officers and crew of any of her Majesty's ships of war out of which such per-centage is at the commencement of this act by law deducted, shall, under the direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, continue to be carried to and to form part of the naval prize cash balance.

So much of the naval prize cash balance as the Lords of the Admiralty think expedient shall from time to time by her Majesty's Paymaster-General, under the authority and direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, be paid and transferred to the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

In case at any time a claim in respect of prize or bounty money is made which the naval prize cash balance is not sufficient to meet, there shall be paid out of the said Consolidated Fund a sufficient sum to meet such claim.

18. A ship's agent shall be entitled, on request, and on payment of reasonable expenses, to be furnished with copies of, or extracts from, any official accounts kept under or for the purposes of this act in relation to any of her Majesty's ships of war for which he is agent.

Remuneration of Ship's Agent.

19. Before any such money as aforesaid is distributed among the officers and crew of any of her Majesty's ships of war, there shall be paid, under the direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, to the ship's agent a per-centage of 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. on the net amount actually distributable, as the sole and full remuneration of the ship's agent for his services in the case.

20. In the following cases—

Where more than one of her Majesty's ships of war are entitled to participate in any such money—

Where the ship's agent is changed pending proceedings—the ship's agent's per-centage shall, in case of difference, be apportioned between or among the respective agents of the several ships, or the several persons having been and being the ship's agent (as the case may be), in such manner as the registrar of the High Court of Admiralty thinks just, having regard to the duration and character of the services of the several agents in the case, subject to objection to the registrar's award to be taken before the judge of the court.

Investment of Salvage, Bounty, Prize, and other Money.

21. Any money for the time being awaiting distribution, but for any reason not immediately distributable as aforesaid, may, under the direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, be invested in or on any proper stocks, funds, or securities; and the proceeds of those stocks, funds, or securities, and any dividends or interest accrued due thereon, shall be distributed as the money invested would have been distributed if an investment had not been made:

Provided that no such investment shall be made of any money pending any adverse claim thereto, except with the consent of the claimant.

Decision as to Distribution or Investment.

22. Where any question (whether in respect of asserted joint capture, or in respect of flag shares, or in respect of any other matter) arises concerning the distribution of any money distributable as aforesaid, or concerning any investment thereof, actual or intended, the High Court of Admiralty shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine the same; and any person claiming an interest in such money, or the Lords of the Admiralty, may apply to the High Court of Admiralty for a judgment on that question; and the court, after hearing the parties interested, shall decide thereon, and such decision shall be final, and shall be binding on all persons concerned.

Miscellaneous.

23. Nothing in this act shall—

(1). authorise a ship's agent or his sub-agent to practise or act as a proctor, attorney, solicitor, or other legal practitioner in any court; or

(2). affect the right or power of the officers and crew of any of her Majesty's ships of war as salvors, seizers, captors, recaptors, or otherwise, or of any of such officers and crew, to take, or cause or procure to be taken, any step or proceeding, or do, or cause or procure to be done, anything that may be necessary or proper to be taken or done for any purpose in any court or elsewhere, in case of the absence or default of the ship's agent; or

(3). affect any right or power of control, or other authority, that her Majesty has or may exercise in any prize cause or other proceeding.

24. Nothing in this act shall invalidate an appointment of an agent made before the commencement of this act, under the Navy Prize Agents Act, 1863; but every agent so appointed shall, from the commencement of this act, be subject to this act, as if he were appointed under it.

25. Her Majesty in Council may from time to time make such Orders as seem meet for the better execution of this act.

26. Every Order in Council under this act shall be published in the London Gazette, and shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within thirty days after the making thereof, if Parliament is then sitting; and if not, then within thirty days after the next meeting of Parliament.

27. This act shall commence on such day not later than the 1st January, 1865, as her Majesty in Council thinks fit to direct.

55. Not to affect rights of Crown; effect of treaties, &c.
56. Commencement of act.

Whereas it is expedient to enact permanently, with amendments, such provisions concerning naval prize, and matters connected therewith, as have heretofore been usually passed at the beginning of a war: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited as "The Naval Prize Act, 1864."

2. In this act—

The term "the Lords of the Admiralty" means the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom, or the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral: The term "the High Court of Admiralty" means the High Court of Admiralty of England:

The term "any of her Majesty's ships of war" includes any of her Majesty's vessels of war, and any hired armed ship or vessel in her Majesty's service:

The term "officers and crew" includes flag officers, commanders, and other officers, engineers, seamen, marines, soldiers, and others on board any of her Majesty's ships of war:

The term "ship" includes vessel and boat, with the tackle, furniture, and apparel of the ship, vessel, or boat:

The term "ship papers" includes all books, passes, sea briefs, charterparties, bills of lading, cockets, letters, and other documents and writings delivered up or found on board a captured ship:

The term "goods" includes all such things as are by the course of Admiralty and law of nations the subject of adjudication as prize (other than ships).

I.—PRIZE COURTS.

3. The High Court of Admiralty, and every Court of Admiralty or of Vice-Admiralty, or other court exercising Admiralty jurisdiction in her Majesty's dominions, for the time being authorised to take cognisance of and judicially proceed in matters of prize, shall be a prize court within the meaning of this act.

Every such court, or other than the High Court of Admiralty, is comprised in the term "Vice-Admiralty Prize Court," when hereafter used in this act.

High Court of Admiralty.

4. The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction throughout her Majesty's dominions as a prize court.

The High Court of Admiralty as a prize court shall have power to enforce any order or decree of a Vice-Admiralty Prize Court, and any order or decree of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in a prize appeal.

Appeal; Judicial Committee.

5. An appeal shall lie to her Majesty in Council from any order or decree of a prize court, as of right in case of a final decree, and in other cases with the leave of the court making the order or decree.

Every appeal shall be made in such manner and form and subject to such regulations (including regulations as to fees, costs, charges, and expenses) as may for the time being be directed by Order in Council, and in the absence of any such Order, or so far as any such Order does not extend, then in such manner and form and subject to such regulations as are for the time being prescribed or in force respecting maritime causes of appeal.

6. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council shall have jurisdiction to hear and report on any such appeal, and may therein exercise all such powers as for the time being may appertain to them in respect of appeals from any Court of Admiralty jurisdiction, and all such powers as are under this act vested in the High Court of Admiralty, and all such powers as were wont to be exercised by the commissioners of appeal in prize causes.

7. All processes and documents required for the purposes of any such appeal shall be transmitted to, and shall remain in, the custody of the registrar of her Majesty in prize appeals.

8. In every such appeal the usual inhibition shall be extracted from the registry of her Majesty in prize appeals within three months after the date of the order or decree appealed from, if the appeal be from the High Court of Admiralty, and within six months after that date, if it be from a Vice-Admiralty Prize Court.

The Judicial Committee may, nevertheless, on sufficient cause shewn, allow the inhibition to be extracted, and the appeal to be prosecuted after the expiration of the respective periods aforesaid.

Vice-Admiralty Prize Courts.

9. Every Vice-Admiralty Prize Court shall enforce within its jurisdiction all orders and decrees of the Judicial Committee in prize appeals, and of the High Court of Admiralty in prize causes.

10. Her Majesty in Council may grant to the judge of any Vice-Admiralty Prize Court a salary not exceeding 500*l.* a year, payable out of money provided by Parliament, subject to such regulations as seem meet.

A judge to whom a salary is so granted shall not be entitled to any further emolument, arising from fees or otherwise, in respect of prize business transacted in his court.

An account of all such fees shall be kept by the registrar of the court, and the amount thereof shall be carried to, and form part of, the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

11. In accordance, as far as circumstances admit, with the principles and regulations laid down in the Superannuation Act, 1859, her Majesty in Council may grant to the judge of any Vice-Admiralty Prize Court an annual or other allowance, to take effect on the termination of his service, and to be payable out of money provided by Parliament.

12. The registrar of every Vice-Admiralty Prize Court shall, on the 1st January and the 1st July in every year, make out a return (in such form as the Lords of the Admiralty from time to time direct) of all cases adjudged in the court since the last half-yearly return, and shall, with all convenient speed, send the same to the registrar of the High Court of Admiralty, who shall keep the same in the registry of that court, and who shall, as soon as conveniently may be, send a copy of the returns of each half-year to the Lords of the Admiralty, who shall lay the same before both Houses of Parliament.

General.

13. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, with the judge of the High Court of Admiralty, may from time to time frame General Orders for regulating (subject to the provisions of this act) the procedure and practice of prize courts, and the duties and conduct of the officers thereof, and of the practitioners therein, and for regulating the fees to be taken by the officers of the courts, and the costs, charges, and expenses to be allowed to the practitioners therein.

Any such General Orders shall have full effect, if and when approved by her Majesty in Council, but not sooner or otherwise.

Every Order in Council made under this section shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

Every such Order in Council shall be kept exhibited in a conspicuous place in each court to which it relates.

14. It shall not be lawful for any registrar, marshal, or other officer of any prize court, or for the registrar of her Majesty in prize appeals, directly or indirectly to act, or be in any manner concerned, as advocate, proctor, solicitor, or agent, or otherwise, in any prize cause or appeal, on pain of dismission or suspension from office, by order of the court or of the Judicial Committee (as the case may require).

15. It shall not be lawful for any proctor or solicitor, or person practising as a proctor or solicitor, being employed by a party in a prize cause or appeal, to be employed or concerned, by himself or his partner, or by any other person, directly or indirectly, by or on behalf of any adverse party in that cause or appeal, on pain of exclusion or suspension from practice in prize matters, by order of the court or of the Judicial Committee (as the case may require).

II.—PROCEDURE IN PRIZE CAUSES.

Proceedings by Captors.

16. Every ship taken as prize, and brought into port within the jurisdiction of a prize court, shall forthwith, and without break broken, be delivered up to the marshal of the court.

If there is no such marshal, then the ship shall be in like manner delivered up to the principal officer of customs at the port.

The ship shall remain in the custody of the marshal, or of such officer, subject to the orders of the court.

17. The captors shall, with all practicable speed after the ship is brought into port, bring the ship papers into the registry of the court.

The officer in command, or one of the chief officers of the capturing ship, or some other person who was present at the capture, and saw the ship papers delivered up or found on board, shall make oath that they are brought in as they were taken, without fraud, addition, subduction, or alteration, or else shall account on oath to the satisfaction of the court for the absence or altered condition of the ship papers or any of them.

Where no ship papers are delivered up or found on board the captured ship, the officer in command, or one of the chief officers of the capturing ship, or some other person who was present at the capture, shall make oath to that effect.

18. As soon as the affidavit as to ship papers is filed, a monition shall issue, returnable within twenty days from the service thereof, citing all persons in general to shew cause why the captured ship should not be condemned.

19. The captors shall, with all practicable speed after the captured ship is brought into port, bring three or four of the principal persons belonging to the captured ship before the judge of the court or some person authorised in this behalf, by whom they shall be examined on oath on the standing interrogatories.

The preparatory examinations on the standing interrogatories shall, if possible, be concluded within five days from the commencement thereof.

20. After the return of the monition, the court shall, on production of the preparatory examinations and ship papers, proceed with all convenient speed either to condemn or to release the captured ship.

21. Where, on production of the preparatory examinations and ship papers, it appears to the court doubtful whether the captured ship is good prize or not, the court may direct further proof to be adduced, either by affidavit or by examination of witnesses, with or without pleadings, or by production of further documents; and on such further proof being adduced, the court shall with all convenient speed proceed to adjudication.

22. The foregoing provisions, as far as they relate to the custody of the ship, and to examination on the standing interrogatories, shall not apply to ships of war taken as prize.

Claim.

23. At any time before final decree made in the cause, any person claiming an interest in the ship, may enter in the registry of the court a claim, verified on oath.

Within five days after entering the claim, the claimant shall give security for costs in the sum of 60*l.*; but the court shall have power to enlarge the time for giving security, or to direct security to be given in a larger sum, if the circumstances appear to require it.

Appraisement.

24. The court may, if it thinks fit, at any time direct that the captured ship be appraised.

Every appraisement shall be made by competent persons sworn to make the same according to the best of their skill and knowledge.

Delivery on Bail.

25. After appraisement, the court may, if it thinks fit, direct that the captured ship be delivered up to the claimant, on his giving security to the satisfaction of the court to pay to the captors the appraised value thereof in case of condemnation.

Sale.

26. The court may at any time, if it thinks fit, on account of the condition of the captured ship, or on the application of a claimant, order that the captured ship be appraised as aforesaid (if not already appraised), and be sold.

27. On or after condemnation the court may, if it thinks fit, order that the ship be appraised as aforesaid (if not already appraised), and be sold.

28. Every sale shall be made by or under the superintendence of the marshal of the court or of the officer having the custody of the captured ship.

29. The proceeds of any sale, made either before or after condemnation, and after condemnation the appraised value of the captured ship, in case she has been delivered up to a claimant on bail, shall be paid under an order of the court either into the Bank of England to the credit of her Majesty's Paymaster-General, or into the hands of an official accountant (belonging to the commissariat or some other department) appointed for this purpose by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury or by the Lords of the Admiralty, subject in either case to such regulations as may from time to time be made, by Order in Council, as to the custody and disposal of money so paid.

Small armed Ships.

30. The captors may include in one adjudication any number not exceeding six, of armed ships not exceeding 100 tons each, taken within three months next before institution of proceedings.

Goods.

31. The foregoing provisions relating to ships shall extend and apply, mutatis mutandis, to goods taken as prize on board ship; and the court may direct such goods to be unladen, inventoried, and warehoused.

Monition to Captors to proceed.

32. If the captors fail to institute or to prosecute with effect proceedings for adjudication, a monition shall, on the application of a claimant, issue against the captors, returnable within six days from the service thereof, citing them to appear and proceed to adjudication; and on the return thereof the court shall either forthwith proceed to adjudication or direct further proof to be adduced as aforesaid, and then proceed to adjudication.

Claim on Appeal.

33. Where any person, not an original party in the cause, intervenes on appeal, he shall enter a claim, verified on oath, and shall give security for costs.

III.—SPECIAL CASES OF CAPTURE.

Land Expeditions.

34. Where, in an expedition of any of her Majesty's naval or naval and military forces against a fortress or possession on land, goods belonging to the state of the enemy or to a public trading company of the enemy exercising powers of government are taken in the fortress or possession, or a ship is taken in waters defended by or belonging to the fortress or possession, a prize court shall have jurisdiction as to the goods or ship so taken, and any goods taken on board the ship, as in case of prize.

Conjoint Capture with Ally.

35. Where any ship or goods is or are taken by any of her Majesty's naval or naval and military forces while acting in conjunction with any forces of any of her Majesty's allies, a prize court shall have jurisdiction as to the same as in case of prize, and shall have power, after condemnation, to apportion the due share of the proceeds to her Majesty's ally, the proportionate amount and the disposition of which share shall be such as may from time to time be agreed between her Majesty and her Majesty's ally.

Joint Capture.

36. Before condemnation, a petition on behalf of asserted joint captors shall not (except by special leave of the court) be admitted, unless and until they give security to the satisfaction of the court to contribute to the actual captors a just proportion of any costs, charges, or expenses or damages that may be incurred by or awarded against the actual captors on account of the capture and detention of the prize.

After condemnation, such a petition shall not (except by special leave of the court) be admitted unless and until the asserted joint captors pay to the actual captors a just proportion of the costs, charges, and expenses incurred by the actual captors in the case, and give such security as aforesaid, and shew sufficient cause to the court why their petition was not presented before condemnation.

Provided, that nothing in the present section shall extend to the asserted interest of a flag officer claiming to share by virtue of his flag.

Offences against Law of Prize.

37. A prize court, on proof of any offence against the law of nations, or against this act, or any act relating to naval discipline, or against any Order in Council or Royal Proclamation, or of any breach of her Majesty's instructions relating to prize, or of any act of disobedience to the orders of the Lords of the Admiralty, or to the command of a superior officer, committed by the captors in relation to any ship or goods taken as prize, or in relation to any person on board any such ship, may, on condemnation, reserve the prize to her Majesty's disposal, notwithstanding any grant that may have been made by her Majesty in favour of captors.

Pre-emption.

38. Where a ship of a foreign nation passing the seas laden with naval or victualling stores intended to be carried to a port of any enemy of her Majesty, is taken and brought into a port of the United Kingdom, and the purchase for the service of her Majesty of the stores on board the ship appears to the Lords of the Admiralty expedient without the condemnation thereof in a prize court, in that case the Lords of the Admiralty may purchase, on the account or for the service of her Majesty, all or any of the stores on board the ship; and the Commissioners of Customs may permit the stores purchased to be entered and landed within any port.

Capture by Ship other than a Ship of War.

39. Any ship or goods taken as prize by any of the officers and crew of a ship other than a ship of war of her Majesty shall, on condemnation, belong to her Majesty in her office of Admiralty.

IV.—PRIZE SALVAGE.

40. Where any ship or goods belonging to any of her Majesty's subjects, after being taken as prize by the enemy, is or are retaken from the enemy by any of her Majesty's ships of war, the same shall be restored by decree of a prize court to the owner, on his paying as prize salvage one-eighth part of the value of the prize, to be decreed and ascertained by the court, or such sum, not exceeding one-eighth part of the estimated value of the prize, as may be agreed on between the owner and the recaptors, and approved by order of the court: provided, that where the recapture is made under circumstances of special difficulty or danger, the prize court may, if it thinks fit, award to the recaptors as prize salvage a larger part than one-eighth part, but not exceeding in any case one-fourth part of the value of the prize.

Provided also, that where a ship, after being so taken, is set forth or used by any of her Majesty's enemies as a ship of war, this provision for restitution shall not apply, and the ship shall be adjudicated on as in other cases of prize.

41. Where a ship belonging to any of her Majesty's subjects, after being taken as prize by the enemy, is retaken from the enemy by any of her Majesty's ships of war, she may, with the consent of the recaptors, prosecute her voyage, and it shall not be necessary for the recaptors to proceed to adjudication till her return to a port of the United Kingdom.

The master or owner, or his agent, may, with the consent of the recaptors, unload and dispose of the goods on board the ship before adjudication.

In case the ship does not, within six months, return to a port of the United Kingdom, the recaptors may nevertheless institute proceedings against the ship or goods in the High Court of Admiralty, and the court may thereupon award prize salvage as aforesaid to the recaptors, and may enforce payment thereof, either by warrant of arrest against the ship or goods, or by monition and attachment against the owner.

V.—PRIZE BOUNTY.

42. If, in relation to any war, her Majesty is pleased to declare, by Proclamation or Order in Council, her intention to grant prize bounty to the officers and crews of her ships of war, then such of the officers and crew of any of her Majesty's ships of war as are actually present at the taking or destroying of any armed ship of any of her Majesty's enemies shall be entitled to have distributed among them, as prize bounty, a sum calculated at the rate of 5*l.* for each person on board the enemy's ship at the beginning of the engagement.

43. The number of the persons so on board the enemy's ship shall be proved in a prize court, either by the examinations on oath of the survivors of them, or of any three or more of the survivors; or, if there is no survivor, by the papers of the enemy's ship, or by the examinations on oath of three or more of the officers and crew of her Majesty's ship, or by such other evidence as may seem to the court sufficient in the circumstances.

The court shall make a decree declaring the title of the officers and crew of her Majesty's ship to the prize bounty, and stating the amount thereof.

The decree shall be subject to appeal, as other decrees of the court.

44. On production of an official copy of the decree, the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall, out of money provided by Parliament, pay the amount of prize bounty decreed, in such manner as any Order in Council may from time to time direct.

VI.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

Ransom.

45. Her Majesty in Council may from time to time, in relation to any war, make such orders as may seem expedient, according to circumstances, for prohibiting or allowing, wholly or in certain cases, or subject to any conditions or regulations or otherwise, as may from time to time seem meet, the ransoming or the entering into any contract or agreement for the ransoming of any ship or goods belonging to any of her Majesty's subjects, and taken as prize by any of her Majesty's enemies.

Any contract or agreement entered into, and any bill, bond, or other security given for ransom of any ship or goods, shall be under the exclusive jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty as a prize court (subject to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council), and if entered into or given in contravention of any such Order in Council shall be deemed to have been entered into or given for an illegal consideration.

If any person ransoms or enters into any contract or agreement for ransoming any ship or goods, in contravention of any such Order in Council, he shall for every such offence be liable to be proceeded against in the High Court of Admiralty at the suit of her Majesty in her office of Admiralty, and on conviction to be fined, in the discretion of the court, any sum not exceeding 500*l.*

Convoy.

46. If the master or other person having the command of any ship of any of her Majesty's subjects, under the convoy of any of her Majesty's ships of war, wilfully disobeys any lawful signal, instruction, or command of the commander of the convoy, or without leave deserts the convoy, he shall be liable to be proceeded against in the High Court of Admiralty at the suit of her Majesty in her office of Admiralty, and upon conviction to be fined, in the discretion of the court, any sum not exceeding 500*l.*, and to suffer imprisonment for such time, not exceeding one year, as the court may adjudge.

Customs Duties and Regulations.

47. All ships and goods taken as prize and brought into a port of the United Kingdom shall be liable to, and be charged with, the same rates and charges and duties of customs as under any act relating to the customs may be chargeable on other ships and goods of the like description; and

All goods brought in as prize which would on the voluntary importation thereof be liable to forfeiture or subject to any restriction under the laws relating to the customs, shall be deemed to be so liable and subject, unless the Commissioners of Customs see fit to authorise the sale or delivery thereof for home use or exportation, unconditionally or subject to such conditions and regulations as they may direct.

48. Where any ship or goods taken as prize is or are brought into a port of the United Kingdom, the master or other person in charge or command of the ship which has been taken or in which the goods are brought shall, on arrival at such port, bring to at the proper place of discharge, and shall, when required by any officer of customs, deliver an account in writing under his hand concerning such ship and goods, giving such particulars relating thereto as may be in his power, and shall truly answer all questions concerning such ship or goods asked by any such officer, and in default shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 100*l.*, such forfeiture to be enforced as forfeitures for offences against the laws relating to the customs are enforced; and every such ship shall be liable to such searches as other ships are liable to, and the officers of customs may freely go on board such ship and bring to the Queen's warehouse any goods on board the same, subject, nevertheless, to such regulations in respect of ships of war belonging to her Majesty as shall from time to time be issued by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

49. Goods taken as prize may be sold either for home consumption or for exportation; and if in the former case the proceeds thereof, after payment of duties of customs, are insufficient to satisfy the just and reasonable claims thereon, the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may remit the whole or such part of the said duties as they see fit.

Perjury.

50. If any person wilfully and corruptly swears, declares, or affirms falsely in any prize cause or appeal, or in any proceeding under this act, or in respect of any matter required by this act to be verified on oath, or suborns any other person to do so, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, or of subornation of perjury (as the case may be), and shall be liable to be punished accordingly.

Limitation of Actions, &c.

51. Any action or proceeding shall not lie in any part of her Majesty's dominions against any person acting under the authority, or in the execution or intended execution, or in pursuance of, this act for any alleged irregularity or trespass, or other act or thing done or omitted by him under this act, unless notice in writing (specifying the cause of the action or proceeding) is given by the intending plaintiff or prosecutor to the intended defendant one month at least before the commencement of the action or proceeding, nor unless the action or proceeding is commenced within six months next after the act or thing complained of is done or omitted, or, in case of a continuation of damage, within six months next after the doing of such damage has ceased.

In any such action the defendant may plead generally that the act or thing complained of was done or omitted by him when acting under the authority, or in the execution or intended execution, or in pursuance, of this act, and may give all special matter in evidence; and the plaintiff shall not succeed, if tender of sufficient amends is made by the defendant before the commencement of the action; and in case no tender has been made, the defendant may, by leave of the court in which the action is brought, at any time pay into court such sum of money as he thinks fit, whereupon such proceeding and order shall be had and made in and by the court as may be had and made on the payment of money into court in an ordinary action; and if the plaintiff does not succeed in the action, the defendant shall receive such full and reasonable indemnity as to all costs, charges, and expenses incurred in and about the action as may be taxed and allowed by the proper officer, subject to review; and though a verdict is given for the plaintiff in the action, he shall not have costs against the defendant, unless the judge before whom the trial is had certifies his approval of the action.

Any such action or proceeding against any person in her Majesty's naval service, or in the employment of the Lords of the Admiralty, shall not be brought or instituted elsewhere than in the United Kingdom.

Petitions of Right.

52. A petition of right, under the Petitions of Right Act, 1860, may, if the suppliant thinks fit, be intituled in the High Court of Admiralty, in case the subject-matter of the petition, or any material part thereof, arises out of the exercise of any belligerent right on behalf of the Crown, or would be cognisable in a prize court within her Majesty's dominions, if the same were a matter in dispute between private persons.

Any petition of right under the last-mentioned act, whether intitled in the High Court of Admiralty or not, may be prosecuted in that court, if the Lord Chancellor thinks fit so to direct.

The provisions of this act relative to appeal, and to the framing and approval of General Orders for regulating the procedure and practice of the High Court of Admiralty, shall extend to the case of any such petition of right intitled or directed to be prosecuted in that court; and, subject thereto, all the provisions of the Petitions of Right Act, 1860, shall apply, mutatis mutandis, in the case of any such petition of right; and, for the purposes of the present section, the terms "court" and "judge" in that act shall respectively be understood to include and to mean the High Court of Admiralty and the judge thereof; and other terms shall have the respective meanings given to them in that act.

Orders in Council.

53. Her Majesty in Council may from time to time make such Orders in Council as seem meet for the better execution of this act.

54. Every Order in Council under this act shall be published in the London Gazette, and shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within thirty days after the making thereof, if Parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within thirty days after the next meeting of Parliament.

Savings.

55. Nothing in this act shall—

- (1). give to the officers and crew of any of her Majesty's ships of war any right or claim in or to any ship or goods taken as prize, or the proceeds thereof, it being the intent of this act that such officers and crews shall continue to take only such interest (if any) in the proceeds of prizes as may be from time to time granted to them by the Crown; or
- (2). affect the operation of any existing treaty or convention with any foreign Power; or
- (3). take away or abridge the power of the Crown to enter into any treaty or convention with any foreign Power containing any stipulation that may seem meet concerning any matter to which this act relates; or
- (4). take away, abridge, or control, further or otherwise than as expressly provided by this act, any right, power, or prerogative of her Majesty the Queen in right of her Crown, or in right of her office of Admiralty, or any right or power of the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom, or of the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral; or
- (5). take away, abridge, or control, further or otherwise than as expressly provided by this act, the jurisdiction or authority of a prize court to take cognisance of, and judicially proceed upon, any capture, seizure, prize, or reprisal of any ship or goods, and to hear and determine the same, and, according to the course of admiralty and the law of nations, to adjudge and condemn any ship or goods, or any other jurisdiction or authority of, or exercisable by, a prize court.

Commencement.

56. This act shall commence on the commencement of the Naval Agency and Distribution Act, 1864.

CAP. XXVI.

An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders under the Local Government Act, 1858, relating to the Districts of Southampton, Brighton, Hexham, Oswaldtwistle, Bolton, Ashford, Oswestry, Fareham, West Cowes, and Wilton.
[23rd June, 1864.]

CAP. XXVII.

An Act for regulating the Proving and Sale of Chain Cables and Anchors.
[23rd June, 1864.]

SECT. 1. Power to corporations, &c. to provide proving establishments for testing chain cables, &c.

2. Power to the Board of Trade to grant licenses for proving chain cables and anchors, and may suspend or revoke licenses.

3. Board of Trade to appoint inspectors from time to time.

4. Licenses to be renewed annually.

5. Fees payable on licenses.

6. As to remuneration of inspector.

7. Tester to test all cables and anchors in proper order, and impress the same with authorised proof mark.

8. As to charges for testing and affixing proof mark.

9. Power to tester to detain chain cable, &c.

10. Tester, on application, to give certificate of test.

11. After the 1st July, 1865, it shall be unlawful for makers and dealers to sell unproved chain cables and anchors.

12. Persons committing certain offences deemed guilty of a misdemeanour.

13. Act not to relieve makers from responsibility.

14. Act not to affect Admiralty contracts.

15. Term of act.

Whereas it is essential, for the better security of lives and property afloat in sea-going ships, to make provision for the proper testing of chain cables and anchors: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

SECT. 1. Any corporation, public body, or company may erect and maintain proving establishments, apparatus, and machinery suitable for the testing of chain cables or anchors, and may, notwithstanding the provisions of any previous act limiting the amount of money to be raised by such corporation or public body, or company, raise money for that purpose by way of loan, secured by mortgage of such establishments, apparatus, and machinery, and of the income to be derived therefrom, or of other property of such corporation, public body, or company: provided always as follows:—

- (1). Nothing in this act shall relieve any corporation or public body from the necessity of obtaining, for any borrowing by them under this act, the consent of any authority or person whose consent is by law requisite to any borrowing by them otherwise than under this act.
- (2). Where the consent of any authority or person is not, by law, requisite to any borrowing by any corporation or public body otherwise than under this act, the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to any borrowing by that corporation or public body under this act is hereby made requisite.
- (3). Nothing in this act shall empower any company to borrow money under this act otherwise than in such manner, and subject to such restrictions, as are prescribed in relation to any borrowing by them for purposes other than the purposes of this act; and if none are prescribed, then in such manner, and under such restrictions, as may be prescribed by resolution of the company, adopted by three-fifths at least of the votes of the shareholders of the company present (personally or by proxy) at a general meeting of the company specially convened for the purpose.
- (4). Any mortgage or charge created or to be created under any power existing at the passing of this act on any property of any such corporation, public body, or company, other than such establishments, apparatus, and machinery as aforesaid, shall have priority over any mortgage created under the powers of this act on the same property.

2. The Lords of the Committee of Privy Council appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and foreign plantations, hereafter in this act called the Board of Trade, may from time to time grant to any corporation, public body, or company, person or persons erecting any proving establishment, apparatus, and machinery suitable for the testing of chain cables or anchors, license to test chain cables and anchors under this act, and the board may suspend or revoke any license so granted, if the board shall see occasion; and the expression "tester" in this act applies to every corporation, public body, or company, person or persons to whom such license shall be granted, so long as such license continues in force: provided, that such license shall not be granted in any case, unless and until the proving establishment, apparatus, and machinery erected have been inspected by an inspector appointed as by this act provided, and have been certified by him as proper and efficient for their purposes.

3. The Board of Trade shall, as soon after the passing of this act as the services of an inspector for the purposes of this act appear to them to be required, and afterwards from time to time as vacancies occur, appoint a fit person to act as inspector of proving establishments, apparatus, and machinery under this act, and may from time to time, at pleasure, remove from his office any person so appointed; and such inspector shall, in the execution of his duties, conform to any regulations from time to time made by the Board of Trade.

4. Any license granted as aforesaid shall be renewable annually, and the same shall not in any case be renewed in any year unless and until the proving establishment, apparatus, and machinery in respect whereof such license was granted, have been inspected by the inspector within that year, and have been certified by him as proper and efficient for their purposes.

5. On the original grant of every such license, and on every annual renewal of every such license, there shall be paid such fee not exceeding 50*l.* as the Board of Trade from time to time appoint; all such fees to be paid to the Board of Trade, and to be by them paid into the receipt of her Majesty's Exchequer, and to be carried to and form part of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

6. The inspector shall receive such salary and allowances as may from time to time be directed by the Board of Trade, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, out of money to be provided by Parliament for the purpose.

7. Every tester shall, with all reasonable dispatch, subject every chain cable or anchor that shall be brought to the proving establishment of such tester for the purpose of being proved, and (unless the parties interested may otherwise agree) in the order in which such chain cables and anchors respectively shall be so brought, to the same tensile strain as that to which chain cables and anchors respectively of similar size, weight, or description are or shall be subjected before being received for the use of her Majesty's naval service, and shall stamp every five fathoms in length of every such chain cable, and also every such anchor, with a stamp or die to be provided for that purpose by the tester, and approved by the Board of Trade, denoting that such chain cable or anchor has been "proved," and which shall bear the mark of the tester.

8. Every tester may make such charges for the testing and stamping with proof mark any chain cable or anchor as such tester may think fit, not exceeding the scale of charges authorised by the Board of Trade; and such tester shall affix upon some conspicuous part of the proving establishment a table of the charges so authorised to be taken by such tester; and such table shall be painted upon a board or boards in distinct black letters on a white ground or in white letters upon a black ground, or may be printed in legible characters on paper affixed to such board or boards; and it shall not be lawful for such tester to make any alteration in such table or in any of the charges therein specified until such alteration shall have been approved by the Board of Trade, and the tester shall have caused notice in writing of the intended alteration to be written or printed on paper, and such paper shall have been, for a period of not less than three months, affixed to such table, so that the same shall be clearly legible by all persons who may consult such table.

9. Any tester may detain any chain cable or anchor which shall have been so tested until such charge shall be paid; and if such charge shall not be paid within three months after the testing of such chain cable or anchor, the tester may cause such chain cable or anchor to be sold by auction, and shall out of the purchase money deduct the expenses of such sale, and all other expenses incurred by such tester with respect to such chain cable or anchor, including all lawful charges on the same, and shall pay the surplus thereof (if any), on demand, to the owner of such chain cable or anchor, or to the captain or master of the vessel, or other person on whose application the chain cable or anchor had been tested.

10. When any tester shall have tested and stamped any chain cable or anchor, such tester shall, if requested by the person on whose application the same was tested, within one month after such testing, make out and deliver, free of charge, to such person a certificate of such testing.

11. From and after the 1st July, 1865, it shall not be lawful for any maker of or dealer in chain cables or anchors to sell or contract to sell for the use of any vessel any chain cable whatever or any anchor exceeding in weight 168 lbs., unless such chain cable or anchor shall have been previously tested and duly stamped in accordance with the provisions of this act; and if any person acts in contravention of this provision he shall for every such offence, upon a summary conviction for the same before a justice of the peace, or in Scotland before any sheriff, justice, or magistrate, be liable to a penalty not exceeding 50*l.*

12. If any person shall stamp or assist in stamping any chain cable or anchor with the stamp of any tester, or with a stamp or mark purporting to be the stamp of any tester, without the authority of the tester whose stamp shall have been so used or counterfeited, or with any other stamp or mark, for the purpose or with the intention of passing such chain cable or anchor, or of allowing or assisting in the same being passed as a chain cable or anchor duly tested and stamped under the powers of this act, or if any person, knowing any such chain cable or anchor to have been so wrongfully marked or stamped as aforesaid, shall sell the same, or shall deliver the same to any person to be taken or used as part of the equipment of any vessel, or if any person shall write out and deliver to any person any certificate or document purporting to be a certificate under this act, that any chain cable or anchor has been tested and stamped under the provisions of this act, knowing that the chain cable or anchor referred to in such certificate or document had not been so tested or stamped, every person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, or in Scotland of an offence, and for every such misdemeanour or offence shall be liable, in the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

13. No maker of, or dealer in, chain cables or anchors, shipowner, or other person, shall by reason of this act, or of anything done thereunder, be relieved from any responsibility in respect of any chain cable or anchor made, sold, or used by him to which, but for this act, he would have been subject.

14. Nothing in this act shall affect any contracts which may be made by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty for the supply of any chain cables or anchors to any of her Majesty's dockyards, or for the use of any of her Majesty's ships.

15. This act shall continue in force till the 1st July, 1872, and no longer.

CAP. XXVIII.

An Act to amend the Common-law Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1853, in relation to Jurors and Juries in the County of Cork. [23rd June, 1864.]

Sec. 1. Short title.

2. Power to judge of assize in county of Cork to direct the same panel for the criminal and civil sides, and to direct two sets of jurors to be summoned, one to attend at the beginning of each assizes, and the other to attend the residue thereof. Summons to be made out either for the first or second set.

3. A printed panel to be prepared and kept in the office of the returning officer, and a parchment copy to be annexed to abstract of Nisi Prius.

4. In case of view, judge to appoint trial during the attendance of viewers.

5. Proceedings not to be vitiated by juror acting before or after the time for which attendance was required.

6. Not to alter the powers of courts to make orders for returning juries as heretofore.

7. Special jurors may be summoned for specified days.

8. Sheriff to be reimbursed expenses of giving special notices to jurors.

CAP. XXIX.

An Act to amend the Act of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, for making further Provision for the Confinement and Maintenance of Insane Prisoners. [23rd June, 1864.]

Sec. 1. Sec. 1 of rectified act repealed.

2. Prisoners becoming insane, power to two justices to inquire, with medical aid, respecting such insanity. If certified by justices and such medical aid that prisoner is insane, Secretary of State may grant warrant for removal of prisoner to a lunatic asylum. If Secretary of State has reason to believe prisoner sentenced to death to be insane, he may desire medical aid to inquire into the same. If prisoner afterwards pronounced sane, how to be dealt with.

3. Prisons placed under directors of convict prisons to be deemed prisons to which visiting justices are appointed, and directors to be deemed the visiting justices.
4. Provisions of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, not hereby repealed, and of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 75, to apply to this act.
5. The charge and maintenance of insane prisoners to be borne by the common fund of the union.
6. So much of sect. 5 of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, as enables overseers to appeal, repealed.
7. Extent of act.

Whereas it is expedient to amend an act passed in the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, intituled "An Act for making further Provision for the Confinement and Maintenance of Insane Prisoners:" be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. The 1st section of the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, is hereby repealed.

2. If any person while imprisoned in any prison or other place of confinement under any sentence of transportation, penal servitude, or imprisonment, or under a charge of any offence, or for not finding bail for good behaviour or to keep the peace, or to answer a criminal charge, or in consequence of any summary conviction or order by any justice or justices of the peace, or under any other than civil process, shall appear to be insane, it shall be lawful, if such person is confined in a prison to which visiting justices are appointed, for two or more of the visiting justices of such prison, or if such person is in any other place of confinement, for two or more justices of the peace of the county, city, borough, or place in which such place of confinement is situate, and such visiting or other justices are hereby required to call to their assistance two physicians or surgeons, or one physician and one surgeon, duly registered as such respectively under the provisions of an act passed in the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, and to be selected by them for that purpose, and to inquire, with their aid, as to the insanity of such person; and if it shall be duly certified by such justices, or any two of them, and such physicians or surgeons, or such physician and surgeon, that such person is insane, one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may, upon receipt of such certificate, if he shall think fit, direct, by warrant under his hand, that such person shall be removed to such lunatic asylum, or other proper receptacle for insane persons, as the said Secretary of State may judge proper and appoint; and if at any time it shall be made to appear to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, that there is good reason to believe that any prisoner in confinement under sentence of death is then insane, either by means of a certificate in writing to that effect in the form given in Schedule (A.), transmitted to him by two or more of the visiting justices of the prison in which such prisoner under sentence of death is confined, or by any other means whatsoever, such Secretary of State shall appoint two or more physicians or surgeons, duly registered as aforesaid, to inquire as to the insanity of such prisoner; and if on such inquiry the prisoner shall be found to be then insane, the fact shall be certified in writing by such persons to the said Secretary of State, and on the receipt of such certificate the said Secretary of State shall direct, by warrant under his hand, that such prisoner shall be removed to such lunatic asylum, or other proper receptacle for insane prisoners as aforesaid; and every person so removed under this act, or already removed and in custody under any former act relating to insane prisoners not under civil process, shall remain in confinement in such asylum, or other proper receptacle as aforesaid, or in any other lunatic asylum, or other proper receptacle to which such person may be removed by any like warrant which the Secretary of State is hereby empowered to issue, if he shall think fit, until it shall be duly certified to the said Secretary of State by two physicians or surgeons, or one physician and one surgeon, duly registered as aforesaid, that such person is sane, and upon the receipt of such last-mentioned certificate the said Secretary of State is hereby authorised to issue a warrant under his hand directing, if the period of imprisonment or custody of such person shall have expired, that he or she shall be discharged, or if such person shall still remain subject to be continued in custody, that he or she shall be removed to any prison or other place of confinement in which he or she may be lawfully confined, to undergo his sentence of death or other sentence, or, if not under sentence, to be dealt with according to law as if no such warrant for his removal to a lunatic asylum had been issued: provided, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to repeal the 38th section of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, or any part thereof.

3. All prisons which now are or may hereafter be placed under the government of the directors of convict prisons, by virtue of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 39, or of any other act now in force or which may hereafter be passed, shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to be prisons to which visiting justices are appointed, and the said directors shall be deemed the visiting justices thereof, and the duties and powers heretofore imposed upon and given to any two or more of such visiting justices shall and may be performed and exercised by any one or more of such directors.

4. All the provisions of the first-mentioned act which are not hereby repealed, and all the provisions of an act passed in the session of the 23 & 24 Vict., intituled "An Act to make better Provision for the Custody and Care of Criminal Lunatics," shall apply to lunatics removed under this act in all respects as if they had been removed under the 1st section of the first-mentioned act, and as if the asylum to which they were removed under this act were any asylum for criminal lunatics to which the provisions of the said 23 & 24 Vict. were applicable.

5. Where any order shall have been or shall hereafter be made upon the guardians of any union formed under the provisions of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, for the payment of money under sect. 2 of the said first-mentioned act, the amount which shall be paid under such order shall be charged by the guardians upon the common fund of the union, and not to the account of any parish therein; and the power given to the justices to order the seizure and sale of the goods and chattels, or the receipt of the rents of the lands or tenements, of any insane person therein referred to, shall cease as regards the overseers, but shall apply to the guardians of the union who shall have incurred any expenses under any such order of justices as aforesaid.

6. So much of sect. 5 of the said first-mentioned act as enables the overseers of any parish in a union to appeal against an order of justices adjudicating as to the settlement of any insane person is hereby repealed.

7. This act shall extend to England and Wales only.

SCHEDULE (A.)

We, —, being visiting justices of —, hereby certify under our hands that we believe —, a prisoner in the said prison of —, under sentence of death, to be now insane.

CAP. XXX.

An Act to provide for the Alteration of the Circuits of the Court of Justiciary in Scotland, and for holding additional Circuit Courts. [23rd June, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Power to her Majesty in Council to alter circuits of Court of Justiciary in Scotland.

2. Orders in Council to be published, and date of taking effect.

3. Power to Court of Justiciary to make orders and regulations.

CAP. XXXI.

An Act to settle an Annuity on Mary Louisa, Countess of Elgin and Kincardine, in consideration of the distinguished Services performed by the late James, Earl of Elgin and Kincardine. [30th June, 1864.]

CAP. XXXII.

An Act to enable certain Banking Copartnerships which shall discontinue the Issue of their own Bank Notes to sue and be sued by their Public Officer. [30th June, 1864.]

The preamble recites the 7 Geo. 4, c. 48, and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 32, ss. 24, 12.

Sect. 1. From and after the passing of this act, every banking copartnership registered and carrying on business under the first-recited act, and entitled to issue their own bank notes under the secondly recited act, which shall discontinue the issue of such bank notes, and shall afterwards commence and carry on the trade or business of bankers in London, or within sixty-five miles from London, in such manner as they will then by law be authorised to do, shall have the same powers and privileges of suing and being sued in the name of any one of the public officers of such copartnership, as the nominal plaintiff, petitioner, or defendant, on behalf of such copartnership; and all judgments, decrees, and orders made and obtained in any such suit may be enforced in like manner as is provided by the first-recited act with respect to copartnerships carrying on business under the provisions of that act; provided that nothing in this act contained shall empower any copartnership to carry on the trade or business of bankers in London, or within sixty-five miles therefrom, in any case where by the existing law they are not authorised so to do.

CAP. XXXIII.

An Act to facilitate the Commutation and Sale of certain Vicarage Tithes in Scotland. [30th June, 1864.]

CAP. XXXIV.

An Act for amending the Law relating to Seats in the House of Commons of Persons holding certain Public Offices. [30th June, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Provision in case of person accepting office of Under Secretary when four Under Secretaries are sitting in the House of Commons.
 2. Provision in case of more Secretaries or Under Secretaries of State being chosen at a general election than are capable of sitting.
 3. Provision in case of other offices.
 4. Provision as to members elected previously to passing of this act.

The preamble recites the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106, s. 4.

Sect. 1. If at any time when four of the Under Secretaries for the time being to her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State are members of the House of Commons, any other person, being a member of that House, accepts the office of Under Secretary of State to any of the said Principal Secretaries, the election of such person shall be, and the same is, hereby declared to be void, and a writ shall be issued for a new election.

A member whose election is so declared to be void (and also any person who, not being a member, holds the office of Principal Secretary of State, or Under Secretary to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State) shall be incapable of being elected or sitting as a member of the House of Commons during such time as he holds such office, and four other Principal Secretaries or Under Secretaries respectively, as the case may be, are members of the House of Commons, but not for any further or longer period.

2. If at any general election there are returned as members to serve in Parliament a greater number of persons holding the office of Principal Secretary of State, or the office of Under Secretary of State, than are permitted by act of Parliament to sit and vote in the House of Commons, the election of such persons shall not be invalidated by reason of such excess; but no one of such persons shall be capable of sitting or voting in the House of Commons until the number of persons returned as members, and holding the same office as himself, is reduced by death, resignation, or otherwise, to the number permitted by law to sit in the House of Commons.

If any person sits or votes in the House of Commons in contravention of this section, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 500*l.* for each day during which he so sits or votes.

3. In all cases in which by any act now in force, or to be hereafter passed, any limit is or shall be imposed upon the number of persons holding any other office who may at the same time sit or vote as members of the House of Commons, the rules established by this act with reference to persons holding the office of Under Secretary of State shall be applied in the same manner as if such other office had been expressly mentioned in this act, unless special provision shall be made to the contrary.

4. No election of any member of the House of Commons elected previously to the passing of this act, shall be deemed to have become void by reason only of any excess which may have occurred, previously to the passing of this act, in the number of members of the said House holding the same office for the time being beyond the number limited by law.

CAP. XXXV.

An Act for more effectually regulating the Sale of Beer in Ireland. [30th June, 1864.]

 2. Commencement of act.
 3. Excise officers in Ireland not to grant licenses or renewal of licenses without producing certificate of justices.
 4. Persons applying for certificate to give notice to police officers.
 5. Police officers may object to the issue of certificate.
 6. Prohibitions, &c. now in force in Ireland with respect to houses, which houses may be kept open, to extend to persons licensed, &c. Rights, &c. of justices to extend to this act.
 7. Penalty for selling beer for consumption on the premises without a license.
 8. Penalty for tipping on premises not licensed for consumption on such premises.
 9. Justices may require production of licenses upon the hearing of any complaint.
 10. Power to justices to mitigate penalty annexed by this act to offences.
 11. Wholesale dealers in beer who shall keep open their premises for the sale of beer between seven o'clock in the evening and seven o'clock in the morning to be subject to police supervision.
 12. Proceedings for the recovery of penalties, &c.
 13. Power to appeal to quarter sessions as to the granting or refusing certificate. Where grant of a certificate shall be reversed, license to be annulled.
 14. Parties herein named not required to produce certificate before obtaining grant, &c. of license.
 15. Definition of "retail."

CAP. XXXVI.

An Act to amend the Law relative to the Payment of the Shares of Prize and other Money belonging to deceased Officers and Soldiers of Her Majesty's Land Forces. [30th June, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Short title.
 2. Interpretation of "prize money."
 3. Sect. 25 of recited act repealed, and new provision hereinafter named substituted.
 4. Indemnity to commissioners.
 5. Indemnity for past payments.

CAP. XXXVII.

An Act to amend and extend the Act for the Regulation of Chimney Sweepers. [30th June, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Short titles.
 2. Commencement of act.
 3. Interpretation of terms.
 4. This act to be construed with principal act.
 5. Application of penalties.
 6. Restriction on employment of children under ten.
 7. Chimney sweepers entering houses to sweep chimneys, &c., not to bring with him persons under sixteen.
 8. Penalties for before-named offences.
 9. Power to justices to impose imprisonment.
 10. Burden of proof of age to lie on chimney sweeper.
 11. Abolition of minimum penalty.

The preamble recites the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 85.

General.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited as "The Chimney Sweepers Regulation Act, 1864;" the principal act may be cited as "The Chimney Sweepers and Chimneys Regulation Act, 1840;" and the principal act and this act may be cited together as "The Chimney Sweepers and Chimneys Regulation Acts, 1840 and 1864."

2. This act shall commence and take effect on the 1st November, 1864.

3. In this act—

The term "sheriff" includes steward:

The term "chimney sweeper" means a person using the trade or business of a chimney sweeper.

4. This act shall be construed together with the principal act as one act, and for this purpose the expression "this act," when used in the principal act, shall be taken to include the present act.

5. Any pecuniary penalty recovered under this act shall be applied as directed in the principal act.

Protection of Children and young Persons.

6. It shall not be lawful for a chimney sweeper to employ a child under the age of ten years to do or assist in doing any work or thing in or about the trade or business of such chimney sweeper elsewhere than within the house or place of business of such chimney sweeper, or the yard or buildings (if any) connected therewith.

7. It shall not be lawful for a chimney sweeper, on any occasion of his entering a house or building for the purpose of sweeping, cleaning, or coring a chimney or flue therein or belonging thereto, or for extinguishing fire in any such chimney or flue, to cause or knowingly allow a person under the age of sixteen years in his employment or under his control to enter before, with, or after him into any part of such house or building, or to be therein for any part of the time during which such chimney sweeper himself continues therein for any such purpose as aforesaid.

8. If any chimney sweeper acts in contravention of either of the foregoing enactments, he shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 10*l*.

9. Where under sect. 2 of the principal act a chimney sweeper is convicted of the offence of compelling or knowingly allowing a person under the age of twenty-one years to ascend or descend a chimney or enter a flue for any purpose in that section mentioned, the justices or sheriff before whom he is convicted may, in lieu of the imposition of any such pecuniary penalty as is authorised by that section, adjudge the offender to be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

10. In any prosecution of a chimney sweeper for any offence against the principal act or against this act, where the age of any young person or child comes in question, the proof of the age of such young person or child shall lie on the defendant.

11. Sect. 2 of the principal act shall be read as if the words "or less than 5*l*." were omitted therefrom.

CAP. XXXVIII.

An Act to facilitate the Redemption of Chief Rents of Ireland. [30th June, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Explanation of certain terms.

2. Owner of land and owner of rent may agree for redemption, &c. of such rent.

3. Application of price of redemption, whether paid in money or in land.

4. In cases of limited interests, contract of redemption to have sanction of judge of Landed Estates Court.

5. Judge of Landed Estates Court to examine and certify title.

6. Deeds affecting contracts for redemption to be chargeable with ad valorem stamp duty as upon a conveyance on sale.

7. Apportioning rent reserved, where part only redeemed.

8. Reservations or exceptions may go with the rent.

9. If payment to trustees be necessary, trustees to be appointed by a judge of Landed Estates Court.

10. Application of purchase money.

11. Judges may make general orders for all proceedings in their courts.

12. Extent of act.

Sect. 1. Any lands or tenements held in fee farm, or for lives renewable for ever, or for any term whereof more than two hundred years shall be unexpired, shall, if subject to any rent during the continuance of such estate, be deemed land, within the provisions of this act; and any person entitled in possession to such lands or tenements, or to the rents and profits thereof, under any will or settlement for any term of years determinable on the dropping of a life or lives, or for any greater estate (not being a term of years less than the term for which such lands or tenements may be held), shall be deemed the owner of such lands or tenements; and any person entitled under any will or settlement to an immediate estate in the said rent, or in the reversion to which the same may be incident, for any term of years determinable on the dropping of a life or lives, or for any greater estate, shall be deemed the owner of such rent; and every estate in land or rent, other than an unincumbered estate in fee, shall be deemed a limited estate, within the provisions of this act; and the words "lands or tenements," in this act, shall extend to any divided or undivided shares thereof respectively; and the word "rent" shall extend to any part or parts thereof; and the words "owner or person" shall extend to two or more persons seized of, or entitled to, divided or undivided shares of, or estates in, the said lands and rents respectively, and shall also include any corporate bodies, aggregate or sole.

2. The owner of any land or tenement subject to any rent may agree with the owner of such rent for the redemption and extinguishment thereof on the following terms; that is to say, the price to be paid for such redemption shall be either a sum of money in gross, or a part of the lands or tenements which were subject to the said rent, or any lands or tenements to which the owner shall be entitled in fee-simple or fee-farm, or which shall be subject to the same limitations as the lands or tenements to be discharged from rent by such agreement.

3. In case the owner of such rent shall have only a limited estate therein, if the price agreed to be paid for the redemption thereof shall be a sum of money in gross, it shall be paid to the trustees appointed by the deed or instrument whereby the estate or interest of such owner of rent shall be limited, or to the trustees to be appointed when necessary by the Landed Estates Court, as hereinafter mentioned, for application in the manner hereinafter mentioned; and if the price shall be land, it shall be conveyed to, and held by, such trustees in lieu of the said rent, subject to the same trusts, limitations, and charges as the rent had previously been subject to.

4. If the owner of the rent have only a limited estate therein, the contract for redemption shall not be concluded without the sanction of one of the judges of the Landed Estates Court, after giving notice to such persons as he shall think proper; and in case such contract shall be sanctioned, such deed or deeds shall be executed by the parties as the said judge shall direct.

5. The judge of the Landed Estates Court shall investigate such title, and if it shall be sufficient, he may cause a certificate of his approbation thereof to be annexed to the contract for redemption; and such certificate shall have the effect of giving to the person taking the land or rent under such contract the same title thereto as if the same had been conveyed to him by one of the judges after a sale thereof in the Landed Estates Court.

6. Every deed executed by the direction of the judge, and every certificate annexed to the contract for redemption, as aforesaid, which respectively shall have the force or operation of a conveyance of any rent-charge under this act, shall be chargeable with ad valorem stamp duty as upon a conveyance on sale; that is to say, where the consideration for such redemption shall be a sum of money in gross the said ad valorem stamp duty shall be chargeable in respect of such sum of money as the purchase or consideration money; and where the consideration for such redemption shall be lands or tenements, then the said deed or certificate shall be chargeable with the ad valorem stamp duty which would be chargeable on a conveyance of such lands or tenements on the sale thereof in consideration of the rent contracted to be redeemed.

7. Where it is intended to redeem under this act a part only of any rent, it shall be lawful for one of the judges of the Landed Estates Court to apportion the rent reserved by the lease or grant as between the part thereof to be redeemed and the land as to which the same is to be extinguished and the remaining part or parts of the said rent and land; and the judge shall direct notice of any such intended apportionment as aforesaid to be given to such persons and in such manner as he shall think fit, and shall hear such parties as shall apply in relation thereto; and after such apportionment, and after the said part of the said rent shall have been so redeemed, the owner of the remaining part of the said rent so apportioned shall have the like remedies for the recovery thereof against the lands out of which the same shall be payable, and the owners and occupiers thereof respectively, as were subsisting for the entire rent before such apportionment; and all the covenants, conditions, and agreements of every lease or grant, except as to the amount of rent to be paid, shall, as regards the part or parts not redeemed, remain in force, in the same manner as they would have done if such redemption had not taken place: provided always, that the enactment in this section shall be deemed to apply to the redemption of any parts of the same original rent to be redeemed at different times; provided also, that where any such part of the said rent so intended to be redeemed shall have been theretofore apportioned or fixed and determined as between the owners of such lands or tenements liable to payment of the whole rent, and such part or parts shall have been theretofore apportioned as between such owners themselves, such apportionment shall be adopted and acted upon to all intents and purposes as if the same was made under the provisions of this section.

8. Any reservations or exceptions, or any returns, services, or duties, secured by or contained in the instrument by which such rent may have been created or reserved, may (with the sanction and approval of a judge of the Landed Estates Court, but not otherwise) be granted or released together with the rent, if the parties interested therein shall agree thereto, and shall express such agreement in the contract by which such rent shall be redeemed or extinguished.

9. When it shall be necessary to pay the purchase money of any rent to trustees for application under this act, if such trustees shall not already exist, or have been created by deed or will, or other instrument, trustees shall be appointed by a judge of the Landed Estates Court, and all such trustees shall apply the same on the same uses and trusts, and hold the same subject to the same charges and limitations, as the rent which had been redeemed; and until a legal application of such purchase money can be made the trustees shall invest the same in the public funds, and shall pay the annual dividends thereof to such persons as would be entitled to the said rent if it had not been redeemed or extinguished.

10. All moneys to be received on any sale effected under the authority of this act may be applied under the directions of a judge of the Landed Estates Court to some one or more of the following purposes; namely, the purchase or redemption of quit or crown rent, or the discharge or redemption of any debt or incumbrance affecting the rent in respect of which such purchase money shall have been paid, or affecting any other hereditaments subject to the same uses or trusts, or the purchase of other hereditaments to be settled in the same manner as the rent in respect of which the money was paid, or the payment to any person becoming absolutely entitled.

11. The judges of the Landed Estates Court may from time to time make general orders for regulating all proceedings in their courts under this act, and the costs of such proceedings; and such rules, so long as they shall be in force, shall have the same effect as if they were comprised in this act.

12. This act shall only extend to Ireland.

CAP. XXXIX.

An Act to amend the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862. [14th July, 1864.]

Seet. 1. Notice of appeal against poor rate to be given to the assessment committee of union.

2. Committee may, with consent of guardians, be respondents.

3. Provision as to costs of committee on appeals.

4. Valuation to be made in writing.

5. Notice of assessment to be given to certain companies.

6. Justices in certain cases not disqualified for hearing appeals.

7. Expenses of overseers incurred with consent of ves- try, or allowed by assessment committee, may be charged on poor rates.

8. Power to guardians, with the order of the Poor-law Board, to borrow money for valuation expenses.

9. Clerks of assessment committees to furnish clerks of the peace with totals of valuation lists.

10. Power to Poor-law Board to order map or plan to be made.

11. Penalty on overseers omitting to make declaration or making false declaration.

12. The 25 & 26 Vict. c. 103, incorporated herewith.

13. Short title.

Seet. 1. Before any appeal shall be heard by any special or quarter sessions against a poor rate made for any parish contained in any union to which the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, applies, the appellant shall give twenty-one days' notice in writing previous to the special or quarter sessions to which such appeal is to be made of the intention to appeal, and the grounds thereof, to the assessment committee of such union: provided, that after the 1st August next no person shall be empowered to appeal to any sessions against a poor rate made in conformity with the valuation list approved of by such committee, unless he shall have given to such committee notice of objection against the said list, and shall have failed to obtain such relief in the matter as he deems just; and which objection, after notice given at any time in the manner prescribed by the said act with respect to objections, the committee shall hear, with full power to call for and amend such list, although the same has been approved of, and no subsequent list has been transmitted to them, and if they amend the same shall give notice of such amendment to the overseers, who shall thereupon alter their then current rate accordingly.

2. The assessment committee of such union may, with the consent of the guardians of such union, after notice shall have been sent to every guardian, appear as respondents to such appeal, but in the name of the guardians of such union, in like manner, and with the same incidents, and subject to the same liabilities, and entitled to the same remedies and rights, as in the case of persons other than the overseers to whom notice of appeal may be given.

3. The costs which the committee may incur in consequence of becoming respondents to such appeal, or of having received notice thereof, shall, if not recovered from the appellants, as well as any costs the committee may be ordered to pay to the appellants, be paid by the guardians and charged to the common fund of the union, unless the court before whom such appeal is heard shall direct that such costs, or any part thereof, shall be charged to the parish, the rate of which is appealed against.

4. Where a valuer is appointed by the assessment committee he shall make his valuation in writing, shewing the particulars of the several hereditaments comprised therein, and the amounts at which he has valued the same respectively, and shall sign such valuation, which shall be open to inspection in like manner and with the same incidents with respect to the taking of copies or extracts as the minute books of the committee.

5. Within fourteen days after the transmission to the assessment committee of any valuation or supplemental valuation list the committee shall give notice to every railway, telegraph, canal, gas, and water company named in such list as the occupier of any property included therein, and not having any office or place of business in the parish to which such list relates, of the sum or sums set down as the rateable value of the property purporting to be occupied by such company or companies, and such notice may be served by being transmitted through the post to the principal office of the company, or one of their principal offices when there shall be more than one.

6. No justice of the peace shall be disqualified for acting in the determination of any appeal against a poor rate at any quarter or special sessions by reason of such justice being rated, or being liable to be rated, in some other parish in the union than that for which the rate appealed against is made.

7. When the overseers of any parish incur any expense in making out any valuation list or supplemental list, or in revising or valuing any of the rateable hereditaments of such parish, under the provisions of the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, with the consent of the vestry given by express resolution, after due notice, they may charge such expense, so far as the same may be authorised by the vestry, upon the poor rate; and if no vestry meeting be held, or no decision arrived at on the subject, then to the extent which the assessment committee shall allow: provided that, as regards the valuation of the property, no expense shall be so charged upon the poor rate, unless the consent of such committee to the procuring of such valuation by the overseers shall have been given previously to the same being made.

8. If the assessment committee order a valuation, with the consent of the board of guardians, to be made of all the rateable hereditaments of any parish, the guardians of the union may, if they think fit, apply to the Poor-law Board for an order to enable them to borrow the requisite amount to pay the cost of such valuation; and if the said board shall issue their order, the said guardians may borrow the same, and charge the poor rates of the several parishes in the union with the repayment of the same by not more than five equal annual instalments; and where the parish for which the valuation is made shall, by reason of any provision in the said Union Assessment Committee Act or this act, be liable to pay the cost of such valuation, the said guardians shall charge the annual instalments, and the interest payable therewith, to such parish, and may recover the same as and with the usual contributions.

9. The clerk of every assessment committee shall send annually, in the month of December, copies of the totals of the gross estimated rental and rateable value of the property included in the valuation lists of the several parishes within the union, and where such totals have been altered by any supplemental valuation list or lists, then of such totals as altered, to the clerk or respective clerks of the peace of the county or counties within which such parishes respectively may be situate.

10. If there be no map or plan of any parish available for the use, or sufficient for the purposes, of the assessment committee, the committee may, with the consent of the guardians, after notice as aforesaid, and under the authority of an order of the Poor-law Board, appoint a competent person to make a map or plan of such parish, and the cost thereof shall be charged either to the common fund, or to the parish, as may be directed by the Poor-law Board.

11. Any overseer who wilfully omits to make the declaration required to be made by the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, or makes the same falsely, knowing the same to be untrue, shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*, upon a summary conviction for the same before two justices of the peace.

12. The provisions of the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, shall, so far as the same are not contrary hereto, be incorporated herewith, and the terms used herein shall be construed in like manner as in that act.

13. This act may be cited as "The Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864."

CAP. XL.

An Act for authorising the Relinquishment in favour of the King of the Hellenes of certain Money payable in respect of the Greek Loan. [14th July, 1864.]

CAP. XLI.

An Act for confirming a Scheme of the Charity Commissioners for the Charity called "The Free Grammar School," in the City of Coventry. [14th July, 1864.]

CAP. XLII.

An Act to provide for Superannuation Allowances to Officers of Unions and Parishes. [14th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Power to guardians and trustees, with consent of Poor-law Board, to grant superannuation allowances to officers in certain cases.

2. Such allowance not to be assignable.

3. Limitation of grants of allowances.

4. Notice of grant to be given to guardians.

5. Interpretation of words herein used.

Sect. 1. That the guardians of any union or parish, and the trustees or overseers of any parish appointed or incorporated under a local act, may, at their discretion, with the consent of the Poor-law Board, grant to any officer whose whole time has been devoted to the service of the union or parish and who shall become incapable of discharging the duties of his office with efficiency, by reason of permanent infirmity of mind or body, or of old age, upon his resigning or otherwise ceasing to hold his office, an annual allowance not exceeding in any case two-thirds of his then salary, whether computed according to a fixed sum or to a poundage, and shall charge such allowance to the same fund as that to which such salary would have been charged if he had continued in his office.

2. This allowance shall be payable to or in trust for such officer only, and shall not be assignable nor chargeable with his debts or other liabilities.

3. No officer shall be entitled to such allowance on the ground of age who shall not have completed the full age of sixty years, and shall not have served as an officer of some union or parish for twenty years at the least.

4. No grant shall be made without one month's previous notice, to be specially given in writing to every guardian of the union or parish and to every member of the board of trustees or overseers (as the case may be), of the proposal to make such grant, and the time when it shall be brought forward.

5. The words herein used shall be interpreted in the manner prescribed by the stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, and the subsequent acts amending or explaining the same.

CAP. XLIII.

An Act to grant additional Facilities for the Purchase of small Government Annuities, and for Assuring Payments of Money on Death. [14th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Deferred annuities may be granted if sum required be paid in smaller instalments.

2. *Such annuities may be granted to extent of 50*l.

3. Portion of sect. 10 of recited act repealed.

4. Limit on age of persons insured.

5. Limit of sum insured.

6. Power to construct fresh tables for annuities and insurances.

7. This act not to come in force until tables can be legally acted on.

8. Provision in case of default by purchasers after five years payments.

9. Purchasers liable to provisions of existing Savings Banks Acts.

10. Jurisdiction of county court. Jurisdiction of courts in Scotland and Ireland.

11. Assignment of contracts.

12. Commissioners not to be affected by notice of trust.

13. Commissioners for Reduction of National Debt to regulate instalments.

14. Power to Postmaster-General, with consent of Treasury, to authorise his officers to receive moneys.

15. Power to commissioners to give authority to trustees of savings banks.

16. Power to Postmaster-General, with consent of Treasury, to make regulations for carrying out provisions of this act.

17. Accounts of Postmaster-General and commissioners to be submitted to Commissioners for auditing Public Accounts.

Whereas under the act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 45, deferred annuities of small amounts can only be granted upon the condition that the full amount required to purchase such annuities shall be paid in one sum, or by annual payments during a course of years fixed at the time of purchase: and whereas under the said act contracts for payment of a sum of money on death cannot be entered into except upon the condition that the party contracting for such payment on death shall at the same time purchase a deferred annuity depending upon his or her own life: and whereas it is expedient to amend the said act: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. Deferred annuities, authorised to be granted by the 2nd section of the said act, may be granted upon the condition, to be fixed at the time of purchase, that the sum required under the said act to purchase such annuity shall be payable in smaller instalments and at shorter periods than are now fixed by the said act.

2. Annuities authorised to be granted under the 2nd section of the said act may be granted in amounts exceeding the limit of 30*l*. fixed by the said act, but no such annuity shall be granted to any one person to an amount exceeding 50*l*. per annum.

3. So much of the 10th section of the said act as requires that a deferred annuity shall be purchased by any person contracting with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt for payment of a sum of money on death shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

4. No contract for a payment on death shall be entered into by or on behalf of any person under the age of sixteen or over the age of sixty years.

5. No contracts for payment to be made on the death of any one person under this and the said act shall be for a greater amount in the whole than 100*l*., or of a less amount than 20*l*.

6. Whereas by the 16th section of the said act it is enacted, that the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may from time to time direct the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt to use and adopt such tables as shall from time to time be authorised and approved of by the said Commissioners of the Treasury for the grant of annuities, and for payment of sums of money to be secured at death, under the provisions of the said act: and whereas it is expedient that the fund to be formed by the receipt of sums on account of all such contracts effected under the said act and this act shall be adequate to meet all claims accruing and to accrue thereon, so as to render certain the fulfilment of all engagements to persons contracting for such annuities or payments on death, or for any compositions or sums agreed to be granted upon the lapse of any contract, without entailing any charge in respect thereof, or in respect of costs and expenses on the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom: be it enacted, therefore, that the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall cause tables to be constructed in accordance with the principles above recited, upon which annuities or payments on death shall be contracted for under the said act and this act, and the said tables shall be framed, first, for such contracts as shall provide for the consideration money in one sum; second, for such contracts as shall provide for the like payments in annual sums; and, third, for such contracts as shall provide for the like payments by more frequent instalments; and such tables, when the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury have approved of the same, shall, together with a statement of the rules observed in constructing them, be laid before both Houses of Parliament for thirty days before they shall be acted upon; and if any address shall be presented to her Majesty from either House of Parliament praying that such tables may be revoked and cancelled, such tables shall be revoked and cancelled accordingly; and thereupon the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall order other tables to be framed for their approval in lieu of the tables so revoked and cancelled. The tables for payments on death shall be calculated, so far as the interest of money is concerned, at the rate of 3*l*. per centum per annum.

7. Until the tables made in pursuance of this act can be legally acted on, this act shall not come into force so far as to enable any grant to be made of an insurance on the life of any person, or any grant to be made of any annuity the consideration money for which is paid by instalments more frequent than annual instalments.

8. In case any person who shall contract under the provisions of the said act and of this act for a payment to be made at death, after having paid the several premiums for a period of not less than five years, shall desire to surrender his policy, or shall make default in the payments stipulated to be made according to the contract, the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, at the option of the party beneficially interested in the contract, shall pay to such person such sum of money, not being less than one-third of the premiums paid by him, as shall be fixed by the regulations authorised to be framed under the provisions of this act, or shall grant to him such a paid-up policy of insurance, or such an immediate or deferred life annuity, under the tables in force under the authority of the said act or this act, as shall be equivalent in value to the sum which, under the provisions of this act, would be paid to him in money; but it shall also be lawful for the said commissioners, if they think fit, to enter into contracts for payments to be made at death, on the condition that no portion of the premiums paid are to be returnable; and no premium shall be returned in pursuance of this section in respect of any contract so made.

9. For the purposes of this act and of the said act, every person purchasing an annuity, or having purchased the same under the provisions of the said act, or contracting for the payment of a sum of money on his or her death, shall be considered as a depositor in the savings bank; and all the provisions of the acts now in force relating to savings banks, in as far as the same can or may be applicable, shall apply to the parties having purchased or purchasing such annuities, or contracting for the payment of money on death, and to the rules and regulations to be made for carrying the same into effect: provided always, that nothing in this act or the said act contained shall be held to exempt any person or persons entering into a contract for a payment on death, or any person or persons becoming beneficially interested therein, from probate or any stamp duty payable by law.

10. If payment of any sum of money due on a contract made under this act for payment of money on death shall be refused by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, the party beneficially interested therein may, if he think fit, instead of proceeding to arbitration in manner provided by the said Savings Banks Acts, take proceedings against the said Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt in the county court of the district in which such contract was entered into, or, with the consent of the said commissioners, in any other county court in the jurisdiction of which such party may be resident, for the recovery of the amount; and any county court in which proceedings under this section may be taken shall have jurisdiction in the matter, and the decision thereupon shall be final and binding on all parties to all intents and purposes, and without any appeal; and for the purposes of this act the contract shall be deemed to have been entered into at the place where the party insured resided at the time at which the contract bears date. For the purpose of arbitration under the said acts relating to savings banks, the said commissioners shall, when necessary, be deemed to be in the place of the trustees of the savings banks. In Scotland the sheriff court, and in Ireland the civil bills court of the chairman of quarter sessions, shall have the same jurisdiction as is given by this section to the county court.

11. Any person who shall contract, under the provisions of this act and of the said act, for a payment to be made at death may, after having duly paid for five years or upwards the premiums thereon, assign his right and interest therein, upon payment of such fee, and on such conditions, as shall be fixed by regulations made under the authority of this act. The assignee of such contract shall take, both at law and in equity, all such right and interest therein, including the right to sue, as was possessed by the assignor, but no other or greater right or interest.

12. The commissioners shall not, except in so far as is provided by the said act, receive or be affected by notice, however given, of any trust affecting any annuity, or any contract for payment on death, made in pursuance of this and the said act.

13. The Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may make regulations for fixing the amounts of the several instalments and premiums, and the periods at which such instalments and premiums shall be paid, in respect of the purchase money payable upon all contracts which shall be made under the authority of this and the said act, but so as not to affect any contract previously made; and no sum in respect of instalments or premiums payable at any one time shall be of less amount than 2*s*.

14. The Postmaster-General, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may, if he shall think fit, authorise and direct such of his officers as he may select to receive such monies as may become payable upon contracts entered into under this and the said act for investment with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, and to pay on behalf of the said commissioners all such moneys as may become due and payable under such contracts.

15. The Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt may, in like manner, with the consent of the said Comcommissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, if they shall think fit, authorise the Trustees of Savings Banks established under the 98 & 27 Vict. c. 87, with consent of such trustees, to receive such moneys as may become payable upon contracts entered into under this act for remittance to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, and to pay on behalf of the said commissioners all such moneys as may become due and payable under such contracts, and may make to the said trustees a reasonable allowance for their expenses, in respect of such transactions, out of the moneys so received and paid over by the said trustees to the said commissioners.

16. The Postmaster-General, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may make all regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act, in so far as his department is concerned; and the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, with the consent of the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may make regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act, so far as the Trustees of Savings Banks are concerned, and also for the execution of contracts on behalf of the said commissioners, by any officer or officers appointed by the said commissioners for that purpose, or appointed by the Postmaster-General with the consent of the said commissioners; and all regulations made by the said Postmaster-General and the said Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt respectively, shall be binding to the same extent as if such regulations formed part of this act; and copies of all regulations issued under the authority of this act shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

17. The annual accounts of the Postmaster-General and of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt to the 31st December in each year, in respect to all moneys received or invested under the authority of this act, shall annually, prior to the 31st March in each year, be submitted by the said Postmaster-General and by the said commissioners for examination and audit to the Commissioners for auditing Public Accounts.

CAP. XLIV.

An Act to amend the Act relating to Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85.

[14th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Where under the provisions of sect. 21 of the said act a wife deserted by her husband shall have obtained, or shall hereafter obtain, an order protecting her earnings and property from a police magistrate, or justices in petty sessions, or the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, as the case may be, the husband and any creditor or other person claiming under him may apply to the court or to the magistrate or justices by whom such order was made for the discharge thereof as by the said act authorised; and in case the said order shall have been made by a police magistrate and the said magistrate shall have died or been removed, or have become incapable of acting, then in every such case the husband or creditor, or such other person as aforesaid, may apply to the magistrate for the time being acting as the successor or in the place of the magistrate who made the order of protection, for the discharge of it, who shall have authority to make an order discharging the same; and an order for discharge of an order for protection may be applied for to and be granted by the court, although the order for protection was not made by the court, and an order for protection made at one petty sessions may be discharged by the justices of any later petty sessions, or by the court.

CAP. XLV.

An Act to further amend the Settled Estates Act of 1856.

[14th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Conditions that leases shall be settled by the court not to be inserted in orders under sect. 10 of recited act.

2. Conditions already inserted may be struck out by court.

3. Removal of doubts as to construction of sect. 1 of recited act.

4. Act to be construed with recited act.

5. Extent of act.

Whereas by the 10th section of the 19 & 20 Vict. [c. 190], intituled "An Act to facilitate Leases and Sales of Settled Estates," it was enacted, that when the Court of Chancery should deem it expedient that any general powers of leasing any settled estates, conformably to the said act, should be vested in trustees, it might, by order, vest any such power accordingly either in the existing trustees of the settlement or in any other persons, and that in every such case the court, if it should think fit, might impose any conditions as to consents or otherwise on the exercise of such power: and whereas, in order to protect the interests of persons interested in the settled estates affected by such powers, the practice of the said court has been to require that leases granted in pursuance of a power vested in any trustees or other persons, under the provisions of the said 10th section of the said act, should be settled by the said court or by a judge thereof, or otherwise should be made conformable with a model lease deposited in the chambers of the judge: and whereas the introduction of such a condition has been found to occasion delay and expense, and so to create great difficulties in carrying into execution the objects of the act, and such conditions may in general be safely omitted, and it is therefore expedient that the said act should be amended as hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. In orders to be hereafter made under the said 10th section for vesting any powers of leasing in any trustees or other persons, no condition shall be inserted requiring that the leases thereby authorised should be submitted to or be settled by the said court or a judge thereof, or be made conformable with a model lease deposited in the judge's chambers, save only in any case in which the parties applying for the order may desire to have any such condition inserted, or in which it shall appear to the court that there is some special reason rendering the insertion of such a condition necessary or expedient.

2. In all cases of orders already made in pursuance of the said 10th section, in which any such condition as aforesaid has been inserted, it shall be lawful for any party interested to apply to the court to alter and amend such order, by striking out such condition, and the court shall have full power to alter the same accordingly, and the order so altered shall have the same validity as if it had originally been made in its altered state; but nothing herein contained shall make it obligatory on the court to act under this clause in any case in which from the evidence which was before it when the order sought to be altered was made, or from any other evidence, it shall appear to the court that there is any special reason why in the case in question such a condition is necessary or expedient.

3. And whereas doubts are entertained whether in the construction of the 1st section of the said act the court is bound by the state of facts existing at the period of the settlement taking effect, or by the state of facts at the time of an application to the court under the said act, and it is desirable that such doubts should be removed: be it enacted, that the said court, in determining what are settled estates within the said act, shall be governed by the state of facts and by the trusts or limitations of the settlement at the time of the said settlement taking effect.

4. This act shall be construed and dealt with as part of the said former act as amended by the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 77, and all proceedings under this act shall be subject to the same rules and orders, and shall be conducted in the same manner, as proceedings under the said former acts.

5. This act shall extend to Ireland, but not to Scotland.

CAP. XLVI.

An Act to provide for the Investment and Appropriation of all Moneys received by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt on account of Deferred Life Annuities and Payments to be made on Death.

[14th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Investment of moneys received by Commissioners for Reduction of National Debt on account of deferred annuities and payments on death.

2. Annual account of all moneys received and of disposal thereof to be laid before Parliament.

3. Commissioners for Reduction of National Debt to transmit to Treasury every five years a statement of financial result of engagements and liabilities. Provision in case of deficiency or surplus.

4. Treasury to issue out of Consolidated Fund sums necessary to make good deficiency.

CAP. XLVII.

An Act to amend the Penal Servitude Acts.

[25th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Short titles.

2. Length of sentences of penal servitude.
3. Punishment of offences in convict prisons.
4. Forfeiture of license.
5. Offences by holders of license.
6. Apprehension of holder of license without warrant.
7. Summary punishment of offences.
8. Where holder of license is summarily convicted, convicting magistrate to forward certificate to Secretary of State or Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.
9. Effect of forfeiture or revocation of license.
10. Licenses may be granted in form differing from that in Schedule (A.)

Whereas two acts were passed, the one the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 90, and the other the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, having for their object the substitution of other punishments in lieu of transportation: and whereas it is expedient to amend the said acts: be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act shall be construed as one with the above-mentioned acts, and the said acts, together with this act, may be cited for all purposes as the Penal Servitude Acts, 1853, 1857, and 1864, and each of the said acts may be cited as the Penal Servitude Act of the year in which it was passed.

Sentences of Penal Servitude.

2. No person shall be sentenced to penal servitude in respect to any offence committed after the passing of this act for a period of less than five years, and where under any act now in force a period of less than five years is the utmost sentence of penal service that can be awarded, a period of five years shall, in respect to any offence committed after the passing of this act, in such act be substituted for the less period; and where under any act now in force a period of either less or more than five years may be awarded as a sentence of penal servitude, the least sentence of penal servitude that can be awarded under that act shall, in respect to any offence committed after the passing of this act, be a period of five years; and where any person shall on indictment be convicted of any crime or offence punishable with penal servitude, after having been previously convicted of felony, or, in Scotland, of any crime (whether such previous conviction shall have taken place upon an indictment, or under the provisions of the act passed in the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128), the least sentence of penal servitude that can be awarded in such case shall be a period of seven years.

Convict Prisons.

3. One of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State in Great Britain, and the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor in Ireland, may, by warrant under his hand and seal, empower any two or more justices of the peace, to be named in such warrant, acting for any county in which a prison for the reception of convicts under sentence of penal servitude is situate, to order, from time to time, the infliction of corporal punishment on any convict confined in such prison, for an offence committed by such convict in such prison, and against the discipline thereof; and any two or more justices of the peace thus empowered shall have the same power of adjudicating on such offences, and of ordering the infliction of such punishment, to be exercised under the same conditions as one of the directors of convict prisons would have, and no greater.

Licenses.

4. A license granted under the said Penal Servitude Acts, or any of them, may be in the form set forth in Schedule (A.) to this act annexed, and may be written, printed, and lithographed. If any holder of a license granted in the form set forth in the said Schedule (A.) is convicted, either by the verdict of the jury, or upon his own confession, or any offence for which he is indicted, his license shall be forthwith forfeited by virtue of such conviction; or if any holder of a license granted under the said Penal Servitude Acts, or any of them, who shall be at large in the United Kingdom, shall, unless prevented by illness or other unavoidable cause, fail to report himself personally, if in Great Britain to the chief police station of the borough or police division, and if in Ireland to the constabulary station of the locality, to which he may go within three days after his arrival therein, and being a male subsequently once in each month, at such time and place, in such manner, and to such person as the chief officer of the constabulary force to which such station belongs shall appoint, or shall change his residence from one police district to another without having previously notified the same to the police or constabulary station to which he last reported himself, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and may be summarily convicted thereof, and his license shall be forthwith forfeited by virtue of such conviction, but he shall not be liable to any other punishment by virtue of such conviction.

5. If any holder of a license granted in the form set forth in the said Schedule (A.)—

- (1). Fails to produce his license when required to do so by any judge, justice of the peace, sheriff, sheriff substitute, police or other magistrate before whom he may be brought charged with any offence, or by any constable or officer of the police in whose custody he may be, and also fails to make any reasonable excuse why he does not produce the same; or,

- (2). Breaks any of the other conditions of his license, by an act that is not of itself punishable either upon indictment or upon summary conviction;

He shall be deemed guilty of an offence punishable summarily by imprisonment for any period not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour.

6. Any constable or police officer may, without warrant, take into custody any holder of such a license whom he may reasonably suspect of having committed any offence, or having broken any of the conditions of his license, and may detain him in custody until he can be taken before a justice of the peace or other competent magistrate, and dealt with according to law.

7. In England and Ireland any offence under this act punishable summarily may be prosecuted summarily before two or more justices; as to England, in manner directed by an act passed in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, intituled "An Act to facilitate the Performance of the Duties of Justices of the Peace out of Sessions within England and Wales with respect to Summary Convictions and Orders," or any act amending the same; and as to Ireland, in manner directed by the act passed in the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, intituled "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts regulating the Proceedings of Petty Sessions, and the Duties of Justices of the Peace out of Quarter Sessions in Ireland," or any act amending the same.

In Scotland, any offence under this act punishable summarily may be prosecuted upon summary conviction, at the instance of the procurator fiscal, before any sheriff or sheriff substitute, or before any two justices of the county, or before the magistrates or any police magistrate of the burgh in which the offence is committed.

8. Where any holder of a license granted in the form set forth in the said Schedule (A.) is convicted of an offence punishable summarily under this or any other act, the justices, sheriff, sheriff substitute, or other magistrate convicting the prisoner, shall without delay forward by post a certificate in the form given in Schedule (B.) to this act annexed; if in England or Scotland to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, if in Ireland to the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor of Ireland, and thereupon the license of the said holder may be revoked in manner provided by the said Penal Servitude Acts.

9. Where any license granted in the form set forth in the said Schedule (A.) is forfeited by a conviction of any indictable offence, or is revoked in pursuance of a summary conviction under this act or any other act of Parliament, the person whose license is forfeited or revoked shall, after undergoing any other punishment to which he may be sentenced for the offence in consequence of which his license is forfeited or revoked, further undergo a term of penal servitude equal to the portion of his term of penal servitude that remained unexpired at the time of his license being granted, and shall, for the purpose of his undergoing such last-mentioned punishment, be removed from the prison of any county, borough, or place in which he may be confined, to any prison in which convicts under sentence of penal servitude may lawfully be confined, by warrant under the hand and seal of any justice of the peace of the said county, borough, or place, and shall be liable to be there dealt with in all respects as if such term of penal servitude had formed part of his original sentence.

10. Provided always, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, or for the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor in Ireland, whenever they shall respectively think fit, to grant from time to time to convicts under sentence of penal servitude, licenses in any other form different from that set forth in Schedule (A.), which they may respectively consider it expedient to adopt, and containing other and different conditions; and such last-mentioned licenses shall be revocable at pleasure by the authority by which they are granted; but no holder of such last-mentioned license shall be deemed guilty of an offence punishable upon summary conviction, merely by reason of the breach of the conditions of the said last-mentioned licenses, or any of them.

SCHEDULES.

SCHEDULE (A.)

CAP. XLVIII.

An Act for the Extension of the Factory Acts.

[25th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Short title.

2. Application of act.

3. Definition of "Factory Acts."

4. Factory to be well cleansed and ventilated.

5. Special rules for regulation of workmen in factories.

6. The Factory Acts, as set out in sect. 3, incorporated with this act, and to apply to manufactures, &c., in first schedule.

7. Recovery and application of penalties.

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as the "Factory Acts Extension Act, 1864."

2. This act shall apply only to the several manufactures and employments mentioned in the said first schedule.

3. The Factory Acts shall mean such provisions as are now in force of the acts following; that is to say,

An act passed in the 4 Will. 4, c. 103, intituled "An Act to regulate the Labour of Children and Young Persons in the Mills and Factories of the United Kingdom."

An act passed in the 7 Vict. c. 15, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Labour in Factories."

An act passed in the 14 Vict. c. 54, intituled "An Act to amend the Acts relating to Labour in Factories."

An act passed in the 17 Vict., c. 104, intituled "An Act further to regulate the Employment of Children in Factories."

An act passed in the 20 Vict. c. 38, intituled "An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to Labour in Factories."

Sanitary Measures.

4. Every factory to which this act applies shall be kept in a cleanly state, and be ventilated in such a manner as to render harmless, so far as is practicable, any gases, dust, or other impurities generated in the process of manufacture that may be injurious to health.

If the occupier of any factory fails to keep the same in conformity with this section, he shall be deemed to be guilty of an offence against this act, and to be subject in respect of such offence to a penalty not exceeding 10*l.* and not less than 5*l.*

The Court having jurisdiction under this act may, in addition to or instead of inflicting any penalty in respect of an offence, under this section make an order directing that within a certain time to be named in such order certain means are to be adopted by the occupier for the purpose of bringing his factory into conformity with this section; the Court may upon application enlarge any time appointed for the adoption of the means directed by the order, but any non-compliance with the order of the Court shall, after the expiration of the time as originally limited or enlarged by subsequent order, be deemed to be a continuing offence, and to be punishable by a penalty not exceeding 1*l.* for every day that such non-compliance continues.

Special Rules.

5. In order to prevent the requirements of this act as to cleanliness and ventilation in a factory being infringed to the detriment of the occupier by the wilful misconduct or wilful negligence of the workmen employed therein, it shall be lawful for the occupier of any factory to make special rules for compelling the observance amongst his workmen of the conditions necessary to insure the required degree of cleanliness and ventilation, and to annex to any breach of such rules a penalty not exceeding 1*l.*

The special rules made in pursuance of this section shall not be of any validity until they have been approved by one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Printed copies of the special rules in force in any factory shall be hung up in a legible condition in two or more conspicuous places in the factory, and a printed copy shall be supplied to any person employed in the factory who may apply for a copy.

A printed copy of the special rules for the time being in force in any factory certified under the hand of the inspector for the time being having jurisdiction over such factory shall be evidence of such rules, and of their having been approved by the said Secretary of State, and it shall be the duty of the above-mentioned inspector to certify copies of special rules when required.

Application of Factory Acts.

6. The Factory Acts shall be incorporated with this act, and shall apply to the several manufactures and employments mentioned in the said first schedule, with the qualifications and subject to the additions hereinafter mentioned:

- (1). The term "factory" as used in this act and in the acts incorporated herewith, shall mean in respect of the manufactures and employments to which this act applies the premises in that behalf specified in the second schedule annexed to this act, but all other terms in this act shall have the same meaning as is assigned to them in the Factory Acts:

- (3). During the first six calendar months next ensuing the passing of this act children of not less than eleven years of age may be employed for the same time, and subject to the same conditions, for and subject to which young persons exceeding thirteen years of age may be employed in pursuance of the said Factory Acts:
- (3). During the first thirty calendar months next ensuing the passing of this act children of not less than twelve years of age may be employed for the same time, and subject to the same conditions, for and subject to which young persons exceeding thirteen years of age may be employed in pursuance of the said Factory Acts:
- (4). In the manufacture of lucifer matches no child, young person, or woman shall be allowed to take his or her meals in any part of the factory where any manufacturing process (except that of cutting the wood) is usually carried on; and any child, young person, or woman who is allowed to take his or her meals in any part of the factory in contravention of the said provision shall be deemed to be employed contrary to the provisions of the Factory Acts:
- (5). In the employment of fustian cutting no child shall be allowed to commence work until the attainment of the age of eleven years; and any child who is allowed to commence work in the employment of fustian cutting before the said age of eleven years shall be deemed to be employed contrary to the said Factory Acts:
- (6). During the first eighteen calendar months next ensuing the passing of this act so much of the said Factory Acts as provide that during any time allowed for meals no child, young person, or woman shall be employed or allowed to remain in any room in which any manufacturing process is carried on, and that all the young persons employed in a factory shall have the time for meals at the same period of the day, shall not apply to the employment of paper staining, or to the manufacture of earthenware; subject to this proviso, that, in the case of the manufacture of earthenware, at no time after the passing of this act shall any child, young person, or woman be allowed to take his or her meals, or to remain during any time allowed for meals, in the dipping houses, dippers drying rooms, or china-scouring rooms:
- (7). Whereas by the said act of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 15, s. 18, it is provided, amongst other things, that all the inside walls, ceilings, or tops of rooms, whether plastered or not, and all the passages and staircases of every factory which shall not have been painted with oil once at least within seven years, shall be limewashed once at least within every successive period of fourteen months, to date from the period when last whitewashed: be it enacted, that, in the case of the manufacture of earthenware, the above-recited provision shall not apply to those parts of the factory which are solely used for the storage of earthenware, and in which no work is carried on except such as is by the custom of the trade incidental to such storage or necessary for keeping the earthenware in a fit state for sale.
7. All penalties under this act, including penalties for breach of a special rule, shall be recoverable and applied in manner in which penalties are recoverable and applicable under the said Factory Acts, and the term "court" as used in this act shall include any justices, sheriff, or other magistrate having jurisdiction in respect of such penalties.

CAP. LV.

An Act for the better Regulation of Street Music within the Metropolitan Police District. [25th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Repeal of recited provision, and substitution of amended provision.

2. Treatment of charge brought to police court while shut.

The preamble recites 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 57.

Sect. 1. Sect. 57 of the said act is hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof the following provision shall take effect as part of the said act, namely, any householder within the metropolitan police district, personally, or by his servant, or by any police constable, may require any street musician or street singer to depart from the neighbourhood of the house of such householder, on account of the illness, or on account of the interruption of the ordinary occupations or pursuits of any inmate of such house, or for other reasonable or sufficient cause; and every person who shall sound or play upon any musical instrument or shall sing in any thoroughfare or public place near any such house after being so required to depart, shall be liable to a penalty not more than 40s., or, in the discretion of the magistrates before whom he shall be convicted, may be imprisoned for any time not more than three days, and it shall be lawful for any constable belonging to the metropolitan police force to take into custody without warrant any person who shall offend as aforesaid: provided always, he shall be given into custody by the person making the charge: provided also, that the person making a charge for an offence against this act shall accompany the constable who shall take into custody any person offending as aforesaid to the nearest station-house, and there sign the charge sheet kept for such purpose.

2. Whenever any person charged with an offence under this act shall be brought to any station-house during the time when the police court shall be shut, it shall be lawful for the constable in charge of the station-house to require the person making the charge to enter into a recognisance, conditioned as is provided by the act passed in the 2 & 3 Viet. c. 47, s. 72; and upon the refusal of such person to do so it shall be lawful for such constable to discharge from custody the person so charged.

CAP. LVI.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain Stamp Duties; and to amend the Laws relating to the Inland Revenue. [25th July, 1864.]

On termination of risk and proof of prior insurance duly stamped, allowance to be made for stamp duty on policy of re-insurance.
2. Bills of exchange payable on demand and indorsed abroad to be deemed foreign bills.
3. Stamp duties on letters of attorney for the receipt of dividends or interest of stocks, funds, &c.
4. Stamp duties on probates, letters of administration, and inventories to extend to British ships at sea.
5. Probates, &c. exempted from stamp duty where the effects do not exceed 100l.
6. Stamp duties on certain licenses to be for the future excise duties.
7. A license may be granted to a hawker upon the certificate required by law, and may be renewed on the production of a previous license.
8. Brewers licenses to expire on the 30th September, in each year.
9. Sects. 54 to 65 of the 7 & 8 Viet. c. 52, and so much of sect. 13 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 68, as relates to brewers in Ireland repealed.
10. Extension to Ireland of certain provisions of acts relating to brewers in Great Britain.
11. Couch frames not to be altered after entry, unless upon notice to supervisor.
12. Tobacco licenses taken out by keepers of inns in Scotland to expire on the same day as licenses taken out by them for the sale of exciseable liquors.
13. Tobacco licenses granted to persons who retail beer not to be consumed on the premises to expire on the 10th October in each year.
14. Auctioneers not to deal in or sell exciseable commodities except upon licensed premises.

18. Provisions of former acts to apply to this act.
19. Taxes in Scotland may be paid by means of post-office orders.

Sect. 1. Whereas an act was passed in the 19 Geo. 2, c. 37, intituled "An Act to regulate Insurance on Ships belonging to the Subjects of Great Britain, and on Merchandises or Effects laden thereon;" and by sect. 4 of the same act it is prohibited to make re-insurance except in the cases therein mentioned: and whereas it is expedient to remove such restriction: be it enacted, that notwithstanding anything contained in the said act, it shall be lawful to make re-insurance upon any ship or vessel, or upon any goods, merchandises, or other property on board of any ship or vessel, or upon the freight of any ship or vessel, or upon any other interest in or relating to any ship or vessel which may lawfully be insured, and such re-insurances shall be deemed to be the insurance of interests which may lawfully be insured within the meaning of the acts imposing stamp duties of sea insurance: provided always, that if within three calendar months next after the termination of the risk on any policy of re-insurance application shall be made to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and it shall be proved to their satisfaction that any such re-insurance as aforesaid has been made on the same property or interest and risk which shall have been previously insured to the same or some greater amount by one or more lawful and valid policy or policies existing at the time of making such re-insurance, and duly stamped for denoting the full and proper duties chargeable thereon, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to make allowance for the stamp duty impressed on the policy of re-insurance in like manner as in the case of spoiled stamps on policies of insurance under the act passed in the 54 Geo. 3, c. 183; and the several provisions of the said act, so far as they are applicable or can be applied, shall be observed and put in force with respect to the allowance of the stamps on the said policies of re-insurance.

2. Any bill of exchange payable on demand, which shall be indorsed out of the United Kingdom, or purport to be so indorsed, wheresoever the same may have been drawn, shall, for the purpose of charging the stamp duty thereon, be deemed to be a foreign bill of exchange, but shall be chargeable with the same amount of stamp duty as an inland bill of exchange for the payment of money otherwise than on demand, according to the amount thereby made payable; and the provisions, regulations, and penalties contained in the 5th section of the act passed in the 17 & 18 Viet. c. 88, shall be deemed to apply to any such bill so indorsed or purporting to be indorsed as aforesaid as if the same were a bill drawn out of the United Kingdom.

3. In lieu of the stamp duties now payable for or upon any letter or power of attorney for the receipt of dividends or interest of any of the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, or of the stocks or funds of the Secretary of State in Council of India, or of India promissory notes, or registered promissory notes, the interest of which is payable by bills of exchange on the Governments of India, Madras, and Bombay respectively, or of the stocks, funds, or shares of or in any joint-stock company or other company or society whose stocks or funds are divided into shares and transferable, there shall be charged and paid for or upon such letter or power of attorney as aforesaid the following stamp duties; that is to say—

Where such letter or power of attorney shall be for the receipt of one payment only, the duty of 1s.

And where the same shall be for continuous receipt, or for the receipt of more than one payment, the duty of 5s.

4. And whereas certain ad valorem stamp duties are by several statutes in that behalf granted and imposed upon, or in respect of, the following instruments; that is to say—

Probate of a will and letters of administration, with or without a will annexed, to be granted in England or Ireland;

Inventory to be exhibited and recorded in any commissary court in Scotland of the estate and effects of any person deceased:

Be it enacted, that the said stamp duties shall be charged and paid in respect of the value of any ship, or any share of a ship, belonging to any deceased person which shall be registered at any port in the United Kingdom, notwithstanding such ship, at the time of the death of the testator or intestate, may have been at sea or elsewhere out of the United Kingdom; and for the purpose of charging the said duties, such ship shall be deemed to have been at the time aforesaid in the port at which she may be registered.

5. No stamp duty shall be chargeable on any such probate, letters of administration, or inventory as aforesaid in any case where the whole estate and effects of the deceased person dying after the passing of this act (exclusive of what he shall have been possessed of, or entitled to, as a trustee for any other person or persons, and not beneficially), shall be sworn not to exceed, and shall not actually exceed, in value the sum of 100l.

6. Whereas it is expedient that the duties now payable as stamp duties upon the licenses hereinafter mentioned should for the future be and become payable as duties of excise: be it enacted, that on and from and after the 1st July, 1864, the duties now payable by law upon, or in respect of, the licenses to be taken out in the United Kingdom by persons carrying on the trades and businesses hereinafter mentioned, as described and defined by the several statutes relating to such licenses and trades or businesses respectively; that is to say—

Appraisers, Pawnbrokers,
Dealers in gold and silver plate,
Owners, proprietors, makers, and compounders of, and persons uttering, vending, or exposing to sale, or keeping ready for sale, any medicine liable to stamp duty,
Hawkers and pedlars,
House agents,
Sellers of playing cards (being makers thereof),
And sellers of playing cards (not being makers thereof),

Shall respectively be denominated, and be deemed to be, duties of excise, and the said licenses respectively shall be granted by such officer or officers of excise, and shall be in such form as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall direct in that behalf; and all powers and directions granted to, or to be observed by, any officers of stamps, and now in force, contained in any act relating to the said duties or licenses, or to the said trades and businesses, or any of them, may be executed and enforced, and shall be observed, by any officer of excise; and all such duties and all fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed by any act or acts of Parliament upon any person who shall carry on any of the said trades or businesses without being duly licensed, or who shall do, or omit to do, any act or thing in any manner contrary to the provisions of any act of Parliament relating to the said licenses, or to the said duties, or any of them, may be collected, sued for, recovered, levied, mitigated, paid, and applied by the same means and methods, and in like manner, and under the same general or special powers, provisions, regulations, and directions as to appeal, and in all other respects, as any other duties of excise, or any fines, penalties, or forfeitures, are directed to be collected, sued for, recovered, levied, mitigated, paid, and applied, under any act relating to the excise revenue, as well as by the means and methods and in the manner directed by the said act or acts relating to the said duties or licenses, or to the said trades or businesses, and in force at the time of the passing of this act.

7. Any license to a hawker, pedlar, and petty chapman in Great Britain may be granted by any authorised officer of excise upon the person applying for it producing the certificate described in the 6th section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 21, or in any former act: provided always, that it shall be lawful to grant to any person who shall have taken out a license as a hawker, pedlar, and petty chapman a renewed license upon the production and surrender of the license last previously issued to him as such hawker, pedlar, and petty chapman, and without the production of any further or other certificate, so long as he shall continue to renew his license immediately upon the expiration thereof.

8. All licenses granted to brewers of beer for sale after the 30th September, 1864, shall continue and be in force from the day of the date of such licenses respectively until and upon the 30th September next after the granting thereof, on which last-mentioned day all such licenses shall expire.

9. Whereas it is expedient that the laws relating to brewers of beer for sale should be made uniform throughout the United Kingdom: be it enacted, that sects. 54 to 65 inclusive (relating to brewers of beer in Ireland) of the act passed in the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 52, and so much of sect. 13 of the act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 68, as prohibits any brewer from receiving or holding a license to sell beer, cider, or spirits by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises, shall be and the same are hereby repealed, except as to anything done or omitted to be done, or as to any penalty or forfeiture which shall respectively have been incurred, before the passing of this act.

10. Sects. 2 and 3 of the act passed in the 56 Geo. 3, c. 58 (as amended and altered by sect. 20 of the act passed in the 25 Vict. c. 22), and sects. 1, 2, and 3 of the act passed in the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 22, and also sects. 15 and 16 of the act passed in the 1 Will. 4, c. 51, shall extend to and be in force in Ireland, and shall apply to brewers of beer in Ireland, and to all acts, matters, and things done or to be done in Ireland, in like manner as at the time of the passing of this act the said sections of the several acts aforesaid do apply to the like acts, matters, and things, done or to be done in Great Britain.

11. And whereas by an act passed in the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 52, couch frames to be used by maltsters in the making of malt are required to be made and constructed in the manner and form thereby prescribed, and it is fit and proper, in order to prevent fraud or error in the gauging of the corn or grain, that no alteration should be made in such couch frames without previous notice to the officers of excise: be it enacted, that if any alteration shall be made in the dimensions, size, or capacity of any couch frame in the malthouse of any maltster after entry thereof made by him with the officer of excise without four days' notice in writing having been previously given by such maltsters of the intended alteration to the supervisor of excise of the district in which such malthouse is situate, the maltster shall forfeit the sum of 100*l.*, together with all corn or grain found in the said couch frame.

12. And whereas licenses for the sale of beer, spirits, and wine in inns and public houses licensed under the authority of justices of the peace in Scotland expire on the 15th May in each year, and it would be convenient to the keepers of such inns and public houses if the licenses to deal in and sell tobacco and snuff therein expired on the said day instead of on the 10th October in each year as now provided by law: be it enacted, that all licenses to deal in or sell tobacco or snuff, which shall be granted after the passing of this act to the keepers of such inns or public houses as aforesaid, shall expire on the 15th May next after the granting of the same; and every such last-mentioned license as aforesaid which shall be in force at the time of the passing of this act, and which but for this act would expire on the 10th October next, shall continue in force until the 15th May, 1865, provided the holder of any such license shall on or before the 11th October next pay to the proper collector of excise in respect of the continuance of such license the sum of 3*s.*, the payment of which sum shall be indorsed by such collector on the said license; and for the purpose of ascertaining the proportionate amount of duty to be paid in respect of my license to deal in or sell any tobacco or snuff which shall be granted after the passing of this act to any person intending to keep such inn or public house as aforesaid, and who shall be entitled under the laws of excise to take out such license as a beginner according to the quarter of the year in which such license shall be taken out, the four quarters of the year shall be deemed to expire on the days hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, the first quarter on the 15th August, the second quarter on the 15th November, the third quarter on the 15th February, and the last quarter on the 15th May.

13. And whereas by the 25th section of an act passed in the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 33, it is enacted, that licenses to be taken out for the sale of tobacco or snuff by innkeepers or persons licensed to sell beer to be consumed upon the premises after the 5th July, 1863, should expire on the 10th October next after the granting thereof, and it is expedient that such licenses when granted to persons licensed to sell beer by retail not to be consumed on the premises, under an act passed in the 1 Will. 4, c. 64, and other acts for the amendment thereof, should also expire on the said last-mentioned day: be it enacted, that all licenses for the sale of tobacco or snuff, which after the passing of this act shall be granted to persons licensed to sell beer as last aforesaid, shall expire on the 10th October next after the granting of the same.

14. And whereas by the 6th section of the act passed in the 8 Vict. c. 15, it is enacted, that any auctioneer, having in force a license on which the duty under the provisions of that act has been paid, may sell by auction any property, goods, or commodities mentioned in the said section without taking out any other license in such respect: and whereas persons holding licenses as auctioneers do under colour thereof carry on the business of dealers and traders in commodities for the dealing in and selling of which excise licenses are by law required to be taken out, and it is expedient to alter and amend the law in this respect: be it enacted, that no license taken out by any person to exercise or carry on the trade or business of an auctioneer shall authorise such person to deal in or sell, either on his own account or for his own benefit, or on account of or for the benefit of any other person, any commodities for the dealing in or selling of which an excise license is required, except upon premises in respect of which the owner of such commodities shall have taken out and shall have in force at the time of the sale thereof the proper excise license for the sale of such commodities; provided that any such licensed auctioneer may sell by auction, by sample, in any town or place, any such commodities as aforesaid, if the owner thereof shall be duly licensed for the sale of such commodities in the same town or place; and provided also, that the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may in their discretion authorise any licensed auctioneer to sell any such commodities by auction where they shall be satisfied that the said commodities are the property of a private person, and are not sold for profit or by way of trade; and if any person shall sell by auction any such commodities contrary to or otherwise than as allowed by this section, he shall incur the penalties imposed upon persons dealing in or selling such commodities without the excise licenses required by law.

15. It shall be lawful for the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, if they shall see fit, and under such regulations, conditions, and limitations as they shall think proper, to authorise and direct the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and their officers to receive postage stamps as and for payment of the respective taxes of land tax and assessed taxes and income tax, or any of them, which may become due or payable in Scotland or Ireland; and, under such regulations as aforesaid, such postage stamps shall be delivered over to the Postmaster-General or his officers, and the amount or value thereof be paid out of the revenue of the post-office to the inland revenue, and accounted for as moneys arising from the said taxes.

16. Whereas the stamp duty chargeable on the admission of any person to the degree of barrister-at-law in either of the Inns of Court in England is 50*l.*, and the stamp duty chargeable on the admission of any person to the like degree in the Inns of Court in Ireland is also 50*l.*, but of the latter sum 10*l.* is payable to the treasurer of the society of King's Inns, to be applied as the society may direct: be it enacted, that where any person duly admitted to the said degree in Ireland, and having paid the full stamp duty chargeable thereon, shall be admitted as aforesaid in England, his latter admission shall be chargeable with the stamp duty of 10*l.* only for the use of her Majesty's revenue; and where any person duly admitted to the said degree in England, and having paid the full stamp duty chargeable thereon, shall be admitted as aforesaid in Ireland, his latter admission shall be chargeable with the stamp duty of 10*l.* only for the use of the said society of King's Inns, to be paid over to the treasurer of the said society, and applied as directed or authorised by the statutes in that behalf.

17. Whereas by an act passed in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 82, and the several acts continuing and confirming the same, the Receiver-General of stamp duties is required to pay parts of certain stamp duties in the said first-recited act mentioned at the receipt of her Majesty's Exchequer in Ireland, and the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being are directed to pay the same to the treasurer of the society of King's Inns: be it enacted, that the said Receiver-General shall pay the same to the said treasurer instead of to the receipt of her Majesty's Exchequer in Ireland as directed by the said acts, to be applied as in the said acts mentioned.

18. All the powers, provisions, clauses, regulations, forfeitures, pains, and penalties contained in or imposed by any act or acts relating to any duties of the same kind or description as the several rates or duties granted by this act respectively, and in force at the time of the passing of this act, and not hereby expressly repealed, shall respectively be in full force and effect with respect to the said rates and duties by this act granted respectively, so far as the same are or shall be applicable, in all cases not hereby expressly provided for, and shall be observed, applied, enforced, and put in execution for and in the raising, levying, collecting, and securing of the said last-mentioned rates and duties, and otherwise in relation thereto, so far as the same shall not be superseded by and shall be consistent with the express provisions of this act, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if the same had been herein repeated and specially enacted, mutatis mutandis, with reference to the rates and duties by this act granted respectively.

19. When any person liable to the payment of any of the duties of land tax, assessed taxes, or income tax in Scotland shall have received the accustomed notice thereof, it shall be lawful for him, within twenty-one days after receiving such notice, to produce the same at any money-order office of the General Post Office in Scotland, and pay to the postmaster there the sum payable according to such notice, and thereupon the said postmaster shall deliver to him a post-office order payable at the General Post Office in London to the Receiver-General of Inland Revenue for the said sum, less the commission for such order, which order such person shall forthwith transmit to the collector at the office for receipt in a letter prepaid, by being duly stamped with the proper postage stamp or stamps, specifying the particulars of the payment in such form as shall be provided by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for that purpose, and deliver to the said person along with the said order; and upon the receipt of the said order and letter, with the particulars and in the form aforesaid, the collector shall credit the person named in the said letter with the amount specified in the said order, and with the said commission, in like manner as if the same had been paid to the collector in cash.

CAP. LXIII.

An Act to suspend the making of Lists and the Ballots for the Militia of the United Kingdom. [25th July, 1864.]

CAP. LXIV.

An Act for further regulating the closing of Public Houses and Refreshment Houses within the Metropolitan Police District, the City of London, certain Corporate Boroughs, and other Places. [25th July, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Short title.
2. Limits of act.
3. Definition of "corporate boroughs."
4. Definition of "refreshment houses," &c.
5. As to the closing of public houses and refreshment houses.
6. Application of act to free vintners.
7. Occasional license.
8. Definition of "local authority."
9. As to adoption of act by corporate borough.
10. Not to apply to sales at railway stations between one and four in the morning.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as the "Public House Closing Act, 1864."

2. This act shall be in force only within the limits of the metropolitan police district, the city of London, and the liberties thereof, and such corporate boroughs and districts of Improvement Commissioners as adopt the same in pursuance of the powers hereinafter given.

3. "Corporate borough" shall mean any place for the time being subject to the act passed in the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, intitled "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales;" "District of Improvement Commissioners" shall mean any place within the jurisdiction of a board of Improvement Commissioners as defined for the purposes of the 12th section of the Local Government Act, 1858; and "Board of Improvement Commissioners" shall mean such commissioners as last aforesaid.

4. "Refreshment house" shall in this act have the same meaning as it has in the act passed in the 23 Vict. c. 27, intitled "An Act for granting to her Majesty certain Duties on Wine Licenses and Refreshment Houses, and for regulating the licensing of Refreshment Houses and the granting of Wine Licenses."

"Exciseable liquor" shall mean any spirits, foreign wine, beer, cider, sweets, or made wines, as defined by the acts relating to the excise.

5. Save as hereinafter mentioned, no licensed victualler within the limits of this act shall sell or expose for sale or open or keep open any house, room, garden, or other place for the sale or consumption of exciseable liquors or any article whatsoever between the hours of one and four o'clock in the morning.

No person within the limits of this act shall open or keep open any refreshment house, or sell or expose for sale or consumption in any refreshment house any refreshments or any article whatsoever between the above-mentioned hours.

Any person acting in contravention of this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*, to be recovered in a summary manner as provided by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43.

Nothing herein contained shall preclude a licensed victualler from selling exciseable liquors to or allowing the same to be consumed by persons lodging in his house, or the keeper of a refreshment house from selling refreshments to or allowing the same to be consumed by persons lodging in his house, within the above-mentioned hours.

Nothing herein contained shall authorise a licensed victualler to sell exciseable liquors on any Sunday, Christmas Day, Good Friday, or day appointed for public fast or thanksgiving, otherwise than during the times at which he is now authorised by law to sell the same, or authorise any other person to sell exciseable liquors, keep open any refreshment house, or sell refreshments otherwise than at the times and upon the conditions prescribed by the acts of Parliament in that behalf made.

6. This act shall apply to a freeman of the company of the master, wardens, and commonalty of vintners of the city of London in the same manner as if he were a licensed victualler.

7. If any licensed victualler or keeper of a refreshment house as aforesaid within the limits of this act, applies to the local authority hereinafter mentioned for a license exempting him from the provisions of this act on any special occasion or occasions, it shall be lawful for the local authority, if in its discretion it thinks fit so to do, to grant to the applicant an occasional license exempting him from the provisions of this act during certain hours and on a special occasion or occasions to be specified in the license; and no licensed victualler or keeper of a refreshment house to whom an occasional license has been granted under this act shall be subject to any penalty for a contravention of this act during the time to which his occasional license extends, but he shall not be exempted by such occasional license from any penalty to which he may be subject under any other act of Parliament.

8. The following persons and bodies of persons shall be deemed to be local authorities capable of granting occasional licenses for the purposes of this act; that is to say—

- (1). In the metropolitan police district, the commissioner of police for the metropolis, subject to the approbation of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State;
- (2). In the city of London and the liberties thereof, the commissioner of city police, subject to the approbation of the lord mayor of the said city;
- (3). In any borough in which this act may be in force, the superintendent or other chief officer of police in the said borough, subject to the approbation of the mayor;
- (4). In any district of improvement commissioners in which this act may be in force, the superintendent or other chief officer of police in the said district, subject to the approbation of the chairman of the commissioners.

9. A corporate borough or board of improvement commissioners may adopt this act by a resolution of the council or board assembled at a meeting held for the purpose, of which such notice has been given and which is required to be summoned on such requisition of the ratepayers as is required in the case of the adoption of the said Local Government Act, 1858, by a corporate borough, or in a district of improvement commissioners, to which the Local Government Act has not been applied, in pursuance of sects. 12 and 13 of the said Local Government Act, and notice of the adoption of this act shall be given to the Secretary of State as in the case of the adoption of the said Local Government Act.

This act shall come into operation in a corporate borough or district of improvement commissioners in which a resolution adopting the same has been passed at the expiration of one month from the date of the passing of the resolution; and no objection whatever to the legality of the adoption of this act by any corporate borough or board of improvement commissioners shall be made at any trial or in any legal proceeding after the expiration of three months from the date of the passing of the resolution adopting the same.

10. Nothing herein contained shall apply to the sale at a railway station between the hours of one and four o'clock in the morning of exciseable liquors or refreshments to persons arriving at or departing from such station by railroad.

CAP. LXV.

An Act for amending the Law relating to the Removal of Clerks of the Peace. [25th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Short title.

2. As to removal of a clerk of the peace when guilty of misconduct otherwise than in execution of his office.

3. Power to appeal to the Lord Chancellor.

4. Definition of "county" and "clerk of the peace."

Whereas by the 6th section of the act of the 1 Will. & M. c. 21, it was enacted, that if in any county, riding, division, or place any clerk of the peace already nominated or thereafter to be nominated should misbehave himself in the execution of his office, and thereupon complaint in writing of the said misbehaviour should be exhibited against him to the justices of the peace in their general quarter sessions, it should be lawful for the said justices or the major part of them, from time to time, upon examination, and due proof thereof, openly in their said general quarter sessions, to suspend or discharge him from the said office; and in such case the custos rotulorum or other person to whom the right of nomination belonged should appoint another sufficient person to be a clerk of the peace, as in the said act mentioned: and whereas cases have occurred in which clerks of the peace have been guilty of such misconduct as to render them unfit to hold their offices, but the justices have been unable to remove them by reason that such misconduct did not occur in the execution of their office: and whereas it is expedient to provide for such cases as lastly hereinbefore mentioned: be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Clerks of the Peace Removal Act, 1864."

2. If it appear to any two justices of the peace of a county that the clerk of the peace of that county has, after the passing of this act, been guilty of such misconduct, otherwise than in the execution of his office, as in the opinion of the said justices to render him an unfit or improper person to hold the office of clerk of the peace, the said justices may exhibit against him to the court of general or quarter sessions of the county a complaint in writing, stating the misconduct of which the clerk has been guilty, a copy of which shall be at the same time sent to the custos rotulorum, and it shall be lawful for the said court, if satisfied, upon due examination in open court, that the clerk complained of has been guilty of the misconduct imputed to him, and that the same is such as to render him an unfit or improper person to hold his office, to suspend or remove him from his office, and a new clerk of the peace shall be appointed in manner provided by the said act in cases where a clerk of the peace has misbehaved himself in the execution of his office.

3. If the clerk of the peace complained of feels aggrieved by the decision of any court of general or quarter sessions under this act, he may, within three months after the delivery of such decision, appeal to the Lord Chancellor by motion in a summary manner, and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to reverse, confirm, or modify the decision of the said court of general or quarter sessions, or to remit the case with such directions as the Lord Chancellor may think just.

4. The word "county" in this act shall include any riding, division, or liberty of a county, or any city, borough, or other place having a separate court of quarter sessions. The expression "clerk of the peace" shall include any officer performing the duties of a clerk of the peace.

CAP. LXVI.

An Act to authorise the Inclosure of certain Lands in pursuance of a Special Report of the Inclosure Commissioners. [25th July, 1864.]

CAP. LXVII.

An Act to amend the Law in certain Cases relating to Trespasses in Pursuit of Game. [25th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Landlord, &c., having reserved the exclusive right to game, to be the legal occupier. Person entering on land in pursuit of game, without consent, deemed a trespasser. Penalty for such trespass.

2. As to the word "game."

3. To extend to Ireland only.

Sect. 1. Where the landlord or lessor of any land has reserved to himself, by any deed or writing, the exclusive right to the game on such land, then such landlord or lessor, for the purpose of prosecuting all persons for trespassing in pursuit of game on such land without his consent, shall be deemed the legal occupier of the said land; and any person who shall enter or be upon the said land in search of or pursuit of game without the consent of such landlord or lessor shall be deemed a trespasser, and shall, on conviction thereof before one or more justices of the peace sitting in petty sessions forfeit and pay such sum not exceeding 40s., together with the costs, as the said justice or justices shall think fit: and such penalty and costs shall be recovered and levied in the same mode and with the same power of appeal as are provided for the recovering and levying of any penalties under the Petty Sessions Act of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, and the Petty Sessions Act of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100, and as if the provisions in the said acts relating to the recovery of penalties were herein expressly repeated.

2. The word "game" shall for all the purposes of this act be deemed to include hares, pheasants, partridges, grouse, heath or moor game, black game, woodcocks, snipes, quails, landralls, wild ducks, widgeon, and teal.

3. This act shall extend and be construed to extend to Ireland only.

An Act to amend the Law relating to certain Nuisances on Turnpike Roads, and to continue certain Turnpike Acts in Great Britain. [29th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Extension of provisions of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, as to steam-engines to turnpike roads.

2. Continuation of acts.

3. The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. c, to continue in force till Aug. 4, 1865.

4. Short title.

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law relating to nuisances on turnpike roads, and to continue for limited times the acts hereinafter specified: be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. Whereas by the general act for the regulation of highways, passed in the session of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 70, it is, amongst other things, provided that it shall not be lawful for any person to erect or cause to be erected any steam-engine, gin, or other like machine, or any machinery attached thereto, within the distance of twenty-five yards from any part of any carriageway or cartway, unless such steam-engine, gin, or other like engine or machinery be within some house or other building, or behind some wall or fence, sufficient to conceal or screen the same from the said carriageway or cartway, so that the same may not be dangerous to passengers, horses, or cattle, and a continuing penalty of 5*l.* a day is imposed for any contravention of the said provision: and whereas it is expedient that a like provision should be made with respect to turnpike roads: be it enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any person to erect or cause to be erected, or to use, any steam-engine, gin, or other like machine, within the distance of twenty-five yards from any part of any turnpike road, unless such steam-engine, gin, or other like engine shall be within some house or other building, or behind some wall, fence, or screen sufficient to conceal or screen the same from the said road, so that the same may not be dangerous to passengers, horses, or cattle; and in case any person shall offend in any of the cases aforesaid, every such person so offending shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 5*l.*, for every day during any part of which such steam-engine, gin, or engine shall be permitted to continue, contrary to the provisions of this act; which said penalties shall be levied, recovered, and applied in such and the same manner as any penalty or forfeiture for any other offence on any turnpike road may be levied, recovered, and applied; but no penalty shall be incurred under this section in respect of any locomotive engine travelling according to law on any public railway, turnpike road, or other highway.

2. The acts mentioned in the schedule to this act annexed shall continue in force until the 1st November, 1865, and no longer, unless Parliament in the meantime continues the same; but every other act now in force for regulating, making, amending, or repairing any turnpike road in Great Britain which will expire at or before the end of the next session of Parliament shall continue in force until the 1st November, 1865, and to the end of the then next session of Parliament, except &c.

3. The act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. c, intituled "An Act for continuing certain Powers to the Trustees of the Road from Kentish Town to Upper Holloway, in the County of Middlesex," shall continue in force till the 4th August, 1865, and no longer.

CAX. XC.

An Act to amend an Act of the present Session, c. 18, as to the Stamp Duties on certain Letters or Powers of Attorney. [29th July, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Letters of attorney for the sale, &c. of Government stock, how to be charged with stamp duty.
2. As to letters requesting that dividends or interest of stocks, &c. may be paid to nominees.

Whereas by an act passed in the present session of Parliament [27 & 28 Vict. c. 18, certain stamp duties are granted and imposed for and upon any letter or power of attorney for the sale, transfer, or acceptance of any of the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, and also for and upon any letter or power of attorney for the receipt of dividends of any such stocks or funds; and doubts have arisen whether both the said duties may not be chargeable upon one and the same instrument: be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. No letter or power of attorney made for the sale, transfer, or acceptance of any of the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds, and duly stamped in that behalf, shall be chargeable with any further or other stamp duty by reason of its containing therein any authority for the receipt of dividends on any such stocks or funds.

2. And whereas doubts have arisen as to whether certain letters or writings hereinafter described are chargeable with stamp duty as letters or powers of attorney: be it enacted, that no letter or other writing under hand only containing any request or direction to any joint stock or other company or society, or to any secretary, treasurer, or other officer thereof, or to any banker, by the owner or proprietor of any stocks, funds, or shares of or in any such company or society, to pay the dividends or interest arising from any such stocks, funds, or shares to any person named in such order, request, or direction, shall be chargeable with stamp duty as a letter or power of attorney.

CAP. XCL

An Act for the more effectual Protection of Her Majesty's Naval and Victualling Stores. [29th July, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Short title.
2. Extent of act.
3. Interpretation of terms.
4. 25 & 26 Vict. c. 84, repealed as to future offences.
5. Marks in schedule appropriated for her Majesty's naval and victualling stores. Imitation a misdemeanour.
6. Obtiteration, with intent to conceal her Majesty's property, felony.
7. Knowingly receiving &c. marked stores a misdemeanour.
8. Knowledge of stores being marked presumed against dealers, &c.
9. Offenders may be summarily convicted in certain cases.
10. Effect of conviction of dealer in old metals.
11. Persons, not dealers in marine stores, &c., found in possession of naval or victualling stores, and not satisfactorily accounting for the same, liable to penalty.
12. Criminal possession explained.
13. No unauthorised person to creep, sweep, &c. for stores within 100 yards of dockyards, &c.
14. Sects. 98, 99, 100, 103, 105, 107 to 113, and 115 to 121, of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, incorporated with this act.
15. None but the Admiralty to prosecute.
16. Penalties, &c. to be applied under orders of Admiralty.
17. Not to prevent persons being indicted under this act, &c.

Be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act may be cited as the "Naval and Victualling Stores Act, 1864."

2. This act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

3. In this act—

The term "the Admiralty" means the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom, or the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral:

The term "dealer in marine stores" means a person bound to conform to the regulations of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, sect. 480:

The term "dealer in old metals" has the same meaning as in the Old Metal Dealers Act, 1861:

The term "in her Majesty's service," when applied to persons, applies also to persons in the employment of the Admiralty:

The term "stores" includes any single store or article.

4. The Naval and Victualling Stores Act, 1862, is hereby repealed; but this repeal, or anything in this act, shall not apply to, or in respect of, any offence, act, or thing committed or done before the passing of this act.

5. The marks described in the schedule to this act may be applied in or on her Majesty's naval and victualling stores to denote her Majesty's property in stores so marked.

It shall be lawful for the Admiralty, their contractors, officers, and workmen, to apply the said marks, or any of them, in or on any such stores as are described in the said schedule.

If any person, without lawful authority (proof of which authority shall lie on the party accused), applies any of the said marks in or on any such stores, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

6. If any person, with intent to conceal her Majesty's property in any naval or victualling stores, takes out, destroys, or obliterates, wholly or in part, any such mark as aforesaid, he shall be guilty of felony, and shall be liable, in the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding four years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

7. If any person, without lawful authority (proof of which authority shall lie on the party accused), receives, possesses, keeps, sells, or delivers any naval or victualling stores bearing any such mark as aforesaid, knowing them to bear such mark, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour.

8. Where the person charged with such a misdemeanour as last aforesaid was, at the time at which the offence is charged to have been committed, a dealer in marine stores, or a dealer in old metals, or in her Majesty's service, knowledge on his part that the stores to which the charge relates bore such mark as aforesaid shall be presumed until the contrary is shown.

9. Any person charged with such a misdemeanour as last aforesaid in relation to stores, the value of which does not exceed 5*l.*, shall be liable, on summary conviction before a justice of the peace, to a penalty not exceeding 20*l.*; or, in the discretion of the justice, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

10. Every conviction of a dealer in old metals, for any offence in this act expressed to be a felony or misdemeanour, shall, for the purposes of registration and its consequences, under the Old Metal Dealers Act, 1861, be equivalent to a conviction under that act.

11. In order to prevent a failure of justice in some cases by reason of the difficulty of proving knowledge of the fact that stores bore such a mark as aforesaid,—

If any naval or victualling stores bearing any such mark are found in the possession of any person not being a dealer in marine stores or a dealer in old metals, and not being in her Majesty's service, and such person, when taken or summoned before a justice of the peace, does not satisfy the justice that he came by the stores so found lawfully, he shall be liable, on conviction by the justice, to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*; and if any such person satisfies the justice that he came by the stores so found lawfully, the justice, at his discretion, as the evidence given and the circumstances of the case require, may summon before him every person through whose hands such stores appear to have passed, and if any such person as last aforesaid who has had possession thereof does not satisfy the justice that he came by the same lawfully, he shall be liable, on conviction by the justice, to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*

12. For the purposes of this act, stores shall be deemed to be in the possession or keeping of any person if he knowingly has them in the actual possession or keeping of any other person, or in any house, building, lodging, apartment, field, or place, open or inclosed, whether occupied by himself or not, and whether the same are so had for his own use or benefit or for the use or benefit of another.

13. It shall not be lawful for any person, without permission in writing from the Admiralty, or from some person authorised by the Admiralty in that behalf, to creep, sweep, dredge, or otherwise search for stores in the sea or any tidal water within 100 yards from any vessel belonging to her Majesty, or in her Majesty's service, or from any mooring place or anchoring place appropriated to such vessels, or from any moorings belonging to her Majesty, or from any of her Majesty's wharves, or dock, victualling, or steam factory yards.

If any person acts in contravention of this provision, he shall be liable, on summary conviction before a justice of the peace, to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour.

14. The following sections of the 24 & 25 Vict. [c. 96], "to consolidate and amend the statute law of England and Ireland relating to larceny and other similar offences," shall be incorporated with this act, and shall for the purposes of this act be read as if they were here re-enacted, namely, sects. 98 to 100, 103, 105, 107 to 113, and 115 to 121, all inclusive; and for this purpose the expression "this act," when used in the said incorporated sections, shall be taken to include the present act.

15. It shall not be competent for any person, other than the Admiralty, to institute or carry on under this act any prosecution or proceeding for any offence.

16. Notwithstanding anything in any act relating to municipal corporations or to the metropolitan police force or in any other act, any pecuniary penalty or other money recovered under this act shall be paid or applied as the Admiralty direct.

17. Nothing in this act shall prevent any person from being indicted under this act or otherwise for any indictable offence made punishable on summary conviction by this act, or prevent any person from being liable under any other act or otherwise to any other or higher penalty or punishment than is provided for any offence by this act, so that no person be punished twice for the same offence.

SCHEDULE.

MARKS appropriated for Her Majesty's Use in or on Naval and Victualling Stores.

CAP. XCII.

An Act for annexing Conditions to the Appointment of Persons to Offices in the Governing Bodies of certain Public Schools and Colleges. [29th July, 1864.]

Sec. 1. Short title.

2. Persons appointed after passing of act to take office subject to future legislation.

3. Definition of "governing body."

4. Duration of act.

Whereas a commission was issued in the year 1861, under letters-patent of her Majesty, for the purpose of inquiring into the nature and application of the endowments and into the administration and management of the colleges and schools named in the schedule annexed hereto: and whereas the said commission reported, amongst other things, to her Majesty, that Parliamentary legislation would be required in order to make the changes which the said commission considered desirable, in respect, amongst other things, of the governing bodies of the said colleges and schools: and whereas it is expedient that no impediment should be created to the free action of the Legislature in making the said changes, by the acquisition of vested interests in the property of the said colleges and schools by persons who may be appointed to offices in the governing bodies thereof after the date of the passing of this act: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Sec. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Public Schools Act, 1864."

2. Every person appointed after the passing of this act to any office in the governing body of any of the said colleges or schools shall take and hold that office subject to such provisions and regulations as may hereafter be enacted respecting the same.

3. "Governing body" shall mean any one of the several bodies referred to in the report of the said commissioners as being a governing body of any of the said colleges or schools, with the addition of the head master or other masters thereof; and any person appointed a member of the governing body of any such college or school as aforesaid, or a master thereof, shall be deemed to be appointed to an office in the governing body of the said college or school.

4. This act shall continue in force until the 1st August, 1865.

SCHEDULE REFERRED TO IN THIS ACT.

- Eton College.
- Winchester College.

3. The Collegiate School of St. Peter, Westminster.
4. The Charterhouse School.
5. St. Paul's School in the city of London.
6. The Merchant Taylors' School in the city of London.
7. The Free Grammar School of John Lyon at Harrow-on-the-Hill, in the county of Middlesex.
8. The school founded by Lawrence Sheriff at Rugby, in the county of Warwick.
9. The Free Grammar School of King Edward VI, at Shrewsbury.

CAP. XCIII.

An Act for confirming certain Provisional Orders made by the Board of Trade under the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, relating to Brighton, Eastbourne, Sandown, Walton-on-the-Naze, Clevedon, Rhyl, Bray, Kircubbin, Walton (Suffolk), Holywood, Exe Bight, Lytham, Ardglass, Filey, Greenock, Carlisle, Lough, Wexford, Torquay, and Oban. [29th July, 1864.]

CAP. XCIV.

An Act to remove Disabilities affecting the Bishops and Clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland. [29th July, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Sect. 9 of the 32 Geo. 3, c. 63, repealed.
2. Definition of "Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland."
3. Stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 33, in part repealed.
4. As to application of provisions of the 50 Geo. 3, c. 60.
5. Persons admitted into holy orders by bishops in Scotland not to be admitted to benefices, &c. in England or Ireland without consent of the bishop of the diocese.
6. Penalty on such persons officiating in certain cases without consent of bishop.

Whereas an act was passed in the 32 Geo. 3, [c. 63], intitled "An Act for granting Relief to Pastors, Ministers, and Lay Persons of the Episcopal Communion in Scotland;" and whereas, by the 9th section of the said act, it is provided and declared, that "no person exercising the function, or assuming the office and character, of a pastor or minister of any order in the Episcopal Communion in Scotland as aforesaid shall be capable of taking any benefice, curacy, or other spiritual promotion within that part of Great Britain called England, the dominion of Wales, or the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, or of officiating in any church or chapel within the same, where the liturgy of the Church of England as now by law established is used, unless he shall have been lawfully ordained by some bishop of the Church of England or of Ireland;" and whereas an act was passed in the 3 & 4 Vict. [c. 33], intitled "An Act to make certain Provisions and Regulations in respect to the Exercise within England and Ireland of their Office by the Bishops and Clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland; and also to extend such Provisions and Regulations to the Bishops and Clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America; and also to make further Regulations in respect to Bishops and Clergy other than those of the United Church of England and Ireland;" by which act the provisions in the said 9th section of the said first-recited act were altered, extended, and amended: and whereas it is expedient that the disabilities affecting the bishops and clergy of the said Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland imposed by the said recited acts should be removed, and for that purpose that the said recited acts should be in part repealed: and whereas, by an act passed in the 50 Geo. 3, [c. 60], intitled "An Act to permit the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the Bishop of London for the Time being, to admit Persons into Holy Orders specially for the Colonies," it is enacted, that "no person who shall have been admitted into holy orders by the Bishops of Quebec, Nova Scotia, or Calcutta, or by any other bishop or archbishop than those of England or Ireland, shall be capable of officiating in any church or chapel of England or Ireland, without special permission from the archbishop of the province in which he proposes to officiate, or of having, holding, or enjoying, or of being admitted to, any parsonage or other ecclesiastical preferment in England or Ireland, or of acting as curate therein, without the consent and approbation of the archbishop of the province, and also of the bishop of the diocese in which any such parsonage or ecclesiastical preferment or curacy may be situated: and whereas doubts may arise after the passing of this act, whether the provisions of the said last-recited act would apply to persons admitted into holy orders by bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. The said 9th section of the said first-recited act is hereby repealed.

2. The words "Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland" shall, for the purposes of this act, mean the Episcopal Communion in Scotland as mentioned in the said first-recited act.

3. The said second-recited act, so far only as it relates to the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland, or the bishops and clergy thereof, is hereby repealed.

4. The provisions and enactments of the said last-recited act shall not be, or be held to be, applicable to any person admitted into holy orders by a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland.

5. No person admitted into holy orders by any bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland shall be entitled to be admitted or instituted to any benefice or other ecclesiastical preferment in England or Ireland, without the consent and approbation of the bishop of the diocese in which such benefice or other ecclesiastical preferment may be situated; and any such bishop shall be entitled to refuse such consent and approbation without assigning reason for such refusal, any law or practice to the contrary notwithstanding; and every such person seeking to be admitted or instituted to such benefice or other ecclesiastical preferment, or to be licensed to any curacy, shall, before being admitted, instituted, or licensed, make and subscribe before such bishop every such declaration and subscription as he would by law have been required to make and subscribe at his ordination, if he had been ordained by a bishop of the United Church of England or Ireland: provided always, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to any such person who shall hold, or shall have held, any benefice or ecclesiastical preferment in England or Ireland.

6. Any person admitted into holy orders by any bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland, and who does not hold, or who has not held, any benefice or ecclesiastical preferment in England or Ireland, who shall knowingly officiate on more than one day within three months in any church or chapel in any diocese in England or Ireland, without notifying the same to the bishop of the diocese in which such church or chapel is situate, or who shall officiate contrary to any injunction of the bishop of the diocese under his hand and seal, shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay the sum of 10*l.* to the Governor of Queen Anne's Bounty, to be recovered by action of debt, brought in the name of the treasurer of the said bounty, in any of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, or in the Court of Session in Scotland at the suit of the public prosecutor, or in Ireland in any court of common law in the name of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

CAP. XCV.

An Act to amend the Act of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, for compensating the Families of Persons killed by Accident. [29th July, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Where no action brought within six months by executor of person killed, then action may be brought by persons beneficially interested in the result of the action.
2. Money paid into court may be paid in one sum, without regard to its division into shares. If not accepted the defendant entitled to verdict on the issue.
3. This and recited act to be read as one.

Whereas by an act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 9 & 10 Vict. [c. 93], intitled "An Act for compensating the Families of Persons killed by Accident," it is amongst other things, provided, that every such action as therein mentioned shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, and child of the person whose death shall have been so caused as therein mentioned, and shall be brought by and in the name of the executor or administrator of the person deceased: and whereas it may happen by reason of the inability or default of any person to obtain probate of the will or letters of administration of the personal estate and effects of the person deceased, or by reason of the unwillingness or neglect of the executor or administrator of the person deceased to bring such action as aforesaid, that the person or persons entitled to the benefit of the said act may be deprived thereof; and it is expedient to amend and extend the said act as hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. If and so often as it shall happen at any time or times hereafter in any of the cases intended and provided for by the said act, that there shall be no executor or administrator of the person deceased, or that there being such executor or administrator no such action as in the said act mentioned shall within six calendar months after the death of such deceased person as therein mentioned have been brought by and in the name of his or her executor or administrator, then and in every such case such action may be brought by and in the name or names of all or any of the persons (if more than one) for whose benefit such action would have been, if it had been brought by and in the name of such executor or administrator; and every action so to be brought shall be for the benefit of the same person or persons, and shall be subject to the same regulations and procedure as nearly as may be, as if it were brought by and in the name of such executor or administrator.

2. And whereas by the 2nd section of the said act it is provided that the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and whose benefit such action shall be brought, and the amount so recovered, after deducting the costs not recovered from the defendant, shall be divided between the before-mentioned parties in such shares as the jury shall by their verdict direct: be it enacted and declared, that it shall be sufficient, if the defendant is advised to pay money into court, that he pay it as a compensation in one sum to all persons entitled under the said act for his wrongful act, neglect, or default, without specifying the shares into which it is to be divided by the jury; and if the said sum be not accepted, and an issue is taken by the plaintiff as to its sufficiency, and the jury shall think the same sufficient, the defendant shall be entitled to the verdict upon that issue.

3. This act and the said act shall be read together as one act.

CAP. XCVI.

An Act to enable certain Royal and Parliamentary Burghs in Scotland to avail themselves of the Provisions of the Acts 22 & 23 Vict. c. 66, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 146, for regulating the Sale of Gas. [29th July, 1864.]

CAP. XCVII.

An Act to make further Provision for the Registration of Burials in England. [29th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. All burials to be registered.

2. By whom books to be kept.

3. Copies of registers to be sent to registrar of diocese.

4. Penalty for failure to comply with act.

5. Registers to be evidence.

6. Registers to be subject to regulations of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, as to searches, &c.

7. As to "burial ground."

8. Short title.

Whereas provision is made by law in England for the registration of burials performed according to the rites of the Established Church, and of all burials in grounds provided under the Burial Acts: and whereas it is expedient that all burials in England be registered: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. All burials in any burial ground in England which are not now by law required to be registered shall be registered in register books to be provided for each such burial ground by the company, body, or persons to whom the same belongs, and to be kept for that purpose, according to the laws in force by which registers are required to be kept by rectors, vicars, or curates of parishes or ecclesiastical districts in England.

2. Such register books shall be so kept for every such burial ground by some officer or person to be appointed to that duty by the company, body, or persons to whom such burial ground belongs.

3. Copies of the register books kept under this act for every such burial ground shall be from time to time made, verified, and signed by such officer or person as aforesaid, and sent by him to the registrar of the diocese wherein the burial ground to which the same relates is situate, to be kept with the copies of the register books of the parishes within such diocese.

4. If any such company, body, or persons, or any such officer or person as aforesaid, wilfully fail to comply with any of the provisions of this act, they or he shall be guilty of an offence against this act, and, on summary conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding 5*l*.

5. The register books kept under this act, or copies thereof, or extracts therefrom, shall be received in all courts as evidence of the burials entered therein.

6. The register books kept under this act shall, as to searches therein, and copies thereof, and extracts therefrom, be subject to the regulations of the act of the 6 & 7 Will. 4 [c. 86], "for registering births, deaths, and marriages in England," so far as those regulations relate to register books of burials kept by rectors, vicars, or curates.

7. In this act the term "burial ground" includes a vault or other place where any body is buried.

8. This act may be cited as "The Registration of Burials Act, 1864."

CAP. XCVIII.

An Act for extending the Provisions of the Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act, 1860. [29th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Extension of Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act.

2. Short title.

Whereas by the act of the session of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 78, and hereinafter referred to as the Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act, 1860, the employment of women, young persons, and children in the process of finishing any yarn or cloth of cotton, wool, silk, or flax, or any of them, or any mixture of them, or any yarn or cloth of any other material or materials, is placed under the regulations of the acts therein recited, and generally known and hereinafter referred to as the Factory Acts, in cases where the said process is carried on in bleaching and dyeing works in which steam, water, or other mechanical power is used: and whereas by the act of the session of the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 38, the provisions of the said Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act, 1860, are extended to the employment of women, young persons, and children in calendering and finishing works in which steam, water, or other mechanical power is used: and whereas the process of finishing is carried on in other works besides those specified in the said acts, and as so carried on is attended with the same evils to the health of the women, young persons, and children employed as in the above-mentioned works: and whereas it is expedient that the process of finishing, wheresoever carried on, should be regulated in the same manner as it is regulated in the above-mentioned works, and that the provisions of the Factory Acts should also be extended to the employment of women, young persons, and children in the processes of hooking or lapping, or making-up and packing: be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. After the passing of this act, all such provisions of the said Bleaching and Dyeing Works, 1860, as are now in force, shall apply to women, young persons, and children employed for hire in any building or premises whatever in the processes of finishing, hooking, or lapping, or of making-up and packing, any yarn of cloth or cotton, wool, silk, or flax, or any of them, or any mixture of them, or any yarn or cloth of any other material or materials, or any of such processes; and in the construction of the said Bleaching Act of 1860, and the acts therein recited, "bleaching works," and "dyeing works," and "factory" shall include any buildings or premises in which the said processes or any of them are carried on: provided always, that this act shall not apply to any building or premises in which all the persons employed are males over the age of fourteen years; provided also, that in buildings and premises within this act the owner or owners may from time to time, by notice to be given in writing to the inspector, elect what shall be the working hours in such buildings and premises, so as that the total number of hours during which females, young persons, and children may be lawfully employed in any one day or week, according to the provisions of the said recited act, be not exceeded, and so as the working hours elected be between six in the morning and six in the evening, or seven in the morning and seven in the evening, or eight in the morning and eight in the evening.

2. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Bleaching and Dyeing Works Act Extension Act, 1864."

Whereas it is expedient to amend an act passed in the session holden in the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, and intitled "An Act for the better Management of Highways in England:" be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Preliminary.

Section 1. The acts hereinafter mentioned may be cited for all purposes by the short titles following; that is to say,

The act passed in the session of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, and intitled "An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to Highways in that Part of Great Britain called England," by the short title of the "Highway Act, 1835:"

The said act passed in the session of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, by the short title of "The Highway Act, 1862:"

This act by the short title of "The Highway Act, 1864." All the above-mentioned acts and any acts passed or to be passed amending the same, shall be included under the short title of "The Highway Acts."

2. This act, so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, shall be construed as one with the Highway Act, 1862.

3. "Poor-law parish" shall mean a place that separately maintains its own poor:

"Highway parish" shall mean a place that after the constitution of a highway district separately maintains its own highways, and is entitled to return a waywarden or waywardens to the highway board of the district:

"Highway rate" shall include any rate, whether poor rate or not, out of the produce of which moneys are payable in satisfaction of precepts of a highway board:

"County" shall include any division of a county that has a separate county treasurer.

Amendments as to Orders of Justices.

4. Where more highway districts than one are comprised in any order of justices, whether provisional or final, and whether made before or after the passing of this act, the formation of each of such districts is to be deemed independent of the formation of any other district, and the order shall for all purposes be construed and take effect as if a separate order had been made in respect of each district; and any variation in a provisional order altering the parishes in any one or more districts comprised in that order shall make that order provisional only as to the particular district or districts in which the alterations are made, and not as to any other district or districts included in the same order.

5. Any parish, township, tithing, hamlet, or other place having a known legal boundary in which there are no highways repairable at the expense of the place, or in which the highways are repaired at the expense of any person, body politic or corporate, by reason of any grant, tenure, limitation, or appointment of any charitable gift, or otherwise howsoever than out of a highway rate or other general rate, shall, for the purposes of the Highway Acts, be deemed to be a place separately maintaining its own highways.

Where part of a parish is, in pursuance of the Local Government Act, 1858, Amendment Act, 1861, sect. 9, treated as forming part of a district constituted under the Local Government Act, 1858, for all purposes connected with the repair of highways, and the payment of highway rates, but for no other purpose, such part shall, for the purposes of the Highway Act, 1862, and this act, be deemed to be a place separately maintaining its own highways, and capable of being included in a highway district, without requiring the consent of the local board to be given.

Where the highways of one part of a parish are, in pursuance of a private act of Parliament, repairable out of a different rate from that out of which the highways of the other part are repairable, each of such parts shall, for the purposes of the Highway Acts, be deemed to be a place separately maintaining its own highways.

6. There shall be repealed so much of the 5th section of the Highway Act, 1862, as provides, that "when it is proposed that only part of a county shall be divided into a highway district, not less than two out of the five justices making such proposal shall be resident in the said district;" and in lieu thereof be it enacted, that when it is proposed that only part of a county is to be constituted a highway district, not less than two out of the five justices making such proposal shall be resident in the said district, or acting in the petty sessional division in which such district, or some part thereof, is situate.

7. The power given by the 7th section of the Highway Act, 1862, of combining townships, tithings, hamlets, or places separately maintaining their own highways, and situate in a poor-law parish, shall extend to combining any two or more of such townships, tithings, hamlets, or places, and any combination so formed shall, for all the purposes of the Highway Acts, be deemed to be a highway parish.

Where a township, tithing, hamlet, or other place separately maintaining its own highways, is situate in two or more poor-law parishes, each part of such township, tithing, hamlet, or other place, may be combined with the parish in which that part is situate.

The justices may, by their provisional and final order, declare that any poor-law parish within their jurisdiction, or residue of a poor-law parish, after excluding such part, if any, as is prohibited by the Highway Act, 1862, either wholly or without the consent of the governing body, from being included in the highway district, shall henceforward become a highway parish; and upon such declaration being made, such poor-law parish, or residue of a poor-law parish, shall thereafter be a highway parish entitled to return a waywarden or waywardens to the highway board of the district in which it is included; and no rate shall be separately levied for the maintenance of the highways, and no separate waywardens be elected in any township, tithing, hamlet, or other subdivision of such poor-law parish, or residue of a poor-law parish.

Where, previously to the passing of the provisional order forming a highway district, no surveyors or waywardens have been elected within any highway parish in that district, and where the mode of electing a waywarden or waywardens in such parish is not provided by this act or the Highway Act, 1862, the justices shall, by their provisional and final orders constituting the district, or by any subsequent provisional and final orders, make provisions for the annual election of a waywarden or waywardens for such parish.

8. Where a parish or place separately maintaining its own highways, is situate partly within and partly without the limits of a borough, the justices may, by their provisional and final orders, include in a highway district the outlying part of such parish or place; and where the outlying part of a parish or place situate as aforesaid has been, previously to the passing of this act, or may be hereafter, included in a highway district, each part of such parish or place shall, for all the purposes of the Highway Acts, be deemed to be a place separately maintaining its own highways; and a waywarden or waywardens shall be elected by the ratepayers in each such part, at such time and in such manner as may be provided by the said justices.

9. The justices in petty sessions may appoint overseers, or otherwise deal with any extra-parochial place, with a view to constituting it a highway parish, or part of a highway parish, in the same manner as the justices may deal with such place, for the purpose of constituting it a place, or part of a place, maintaining its own poor, in pursuance of the powers for that purpose given by the act of the 30 Vict. c. 19.

10. The paragraph No. 5 in the 6th section of the Highway Act, 1862, shall be repealed, and in lieu thereof be it enacted,

The first meeting of the highway board, after the formation of a district, shall be held at such time as may be appointed by the provisional or final order of the justices, so that the time appointed be not more than seven days after the expiration of the time limited by law for the election of waywardens, or, in the case of a special day being appointed for such election as hereinafter mentioned, be not more than twenty-one days after that day.

The day appointed for the first meeting of the board shall, for all the purposes of the Highway Acts, be deemed to be the day of the formation of the district; and the surveyor for the time being of every parish within the district shall continue in office until seven days after the appointment of the district surveyor, and no longer.

11. In forming a highway district under the Highway Act, 1862, the justices may, for the purpose of avoiding delay in bringing the act into operation, appoint by their final order a day on which the first election of waywardens as members of the highway board is to take place in the district.

On the day appointed for the election waywardens shall be elected in every parish in the district entitled to elect such officers, by the same persons and in the same manner by and in which waywardens are elected under the Highway Act, 1862, and all the provisions of the Highway Acts relating to the qualifications of surveyors or waywardens, and to the appointment of surveyors and waywardens by justices in the event of no election taking place, shall apply accordingly; but the waywardens elected under this section shall continue in office only until the time at which the next annual election of surveyors would have taken place in the several parishes of the district if the same had not been constituted a highway district, and at that time new waywardens shall be elected in manner provided by the Highway Acts.

12. No order of the justices forming a highway district shall be invalidated by reason of its not being published in the London Gazette; and where any reference is made in any section of the Highway Act, 1862, to the date of the publication in the Gazette of the order, such section shall be construed as if the date of the making of the final order under which the district is formed were substituted for "the date of the publication in the Gazette of the order under which the district is formed;" and any copy of the provisional or final order of the justices forming a highway district, certified under the hand of the clerk of the peace to be a true copy, shall be receivable in all courts of justice and in all legal proceedings as evidence of the formation of the district, and of the matters in the said order mentioned.

13. Contiguous places situate in different counties and places situate partly in one county and partly in another county or counties shall, for the purpose of being united in one highway district, be deemed to be subject to the jurisdiction of the justices of any county, who may make a provisional and final order constituting them an highway district, in the same manner as if all such places, or parts of places, were situate in such last-mentioned county; subject to this proviso, that the provisional and final orders of the justices of the said county shall be of no validity unless provisional and final orders to the same effect are passed either concurrently with, or subsequently to, the first-mentioned provisional and final orders by the justices of every other county in which any of the said places, or parts of places, are situate.

14. The approval of the justices of any county to any provisional order made by the justices of another county affecting any place in such first-mentioned county, in pursuance of the 39th section of the Highway Act, 1862, shall be testified by provisional and final orders of the justices of the said first-mentioned county.

The powers conferred on justices by the 39th section of the Highway Act, 1862, shall be deemed to extend to the separation of any townships, tithings, hamlets, or places separately maintaining their own highways which may have been consolidated by any previous order of the justices, and to an alteration in the number of waywardens of any parish.

15. Where, after the formation of a highway district, an application is made by any parish in that district to any court of general or quarter sessions, praying that the said parish may be removed from that district, all costs incidental to, or consequential on, such application, and the removal of the said parish shall, unless the court otherwise directs, be paid by the parish that has made the application in such manner as the said court may direct. The amount of such costs shall be raised in the same manner as if they were expenses incurred in maintaining and keeping in repair the highways of that parish.

16. No order of the justices forming a highway district, whether made before or after the passing of this act, shall be void by reason that it includes in such district a place which the justices are not entitled to include under the provisions of this act, or the Highway Act, 1862, or one of such acts; and any order containing such prohibited place shall be construed and take effect as if that place had not been mentioned therein.

All expenses properly incurred by the justices of any county in maintaining the validity of any provisional or final order made by them shall be payable out of the county rate of that county.

17. All powers and jurisdictions vested in justices by the Highway Act, 1862, and this act, or either of such acts, may from time to time be exercised in relation to highway districts, highway boards, and highway parishes already formed, as well as upon the occasion of forming new highway districts, boards, or parishes; and where an alteration is made in part only of a highway district the residue of that district shall not be affected thereby, but shall continue subject to the Highway Acts in the same manner as if no such alteration had been made.

18. The expression "provisional and final order," as used in this act, shall mean a provisional and final order passed and published in manner provided by this act and the Highway Act, 1862, with the necessary variations as to notices and otherwise.

Miscellaneous Amendments.

19. Every waywarden, before taking his seat as a member of a highway board, shall produce a certificate of his having been duly elected or appointed a waywarden, and such certificate shall, in the case of an elected waywarden, be signed by the chairman of the vestry or other meeting at which he was elected; and in the case of a waywarden appointed by justices, be signed by the justices making the appointment.

A waywarden may sit as such for more places than one, but he shall be entitled to one vote only as waywarden.

20. Whereas doubts are entertained whether the 46th section of the Highway Act of 1835 applies to a highway district: be it enacted, that that section shall not apply to the highway board of any highway district or to any parish within any highway district.

Notwithstanding anything contained in the act of the session of the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 61, or in any other act, any waywarden may contract for the supply or cartage of materials within the parish for which he is waywarden, with the license of two justices assembled at petty sessions; such license to be granted on the application of the clerk of the highway board, who must be authorised to make such application by a resolution of his board assembled at a meeting of which notice has been given.

21. When any highway board consider any highway unnecessary for public use, they may direct the district surveyor to apply to two justices to view the same, and thereupon the like proceedings shall be had as where application is made under the Highway Act, 1835, to procure the stopping up of any highway, save only that the order to be made thereupon, instead of directing the highway to be stopped up, shall direct that the same shall cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair, and the liability of the parish shall cease accordingly; and for the purpose of such proceedings under this enactment, such variation shall be made in any notice, certificate, or other matter preliminary to the making of such order as the nature of the case may require: provided, that if at any time thereafter, upon application of any person interested in the maintenance of such highway, after one month's previous notice in writing thereof to the clerk of the highway board for the district in which such highway is situated, it appear to any court of general or quarter sessions of the peace that from any change of circumstances since the time of the making of any such order as aforesaid under which the liability of the parish to repair such highway has ceased the same has become of public use, and ought to be kept in repair by the parish, they may direct that the liability of the parish to repair the same shall revive from and after such day as they may name in their order, and such liability shall revive accordingly as if the first-mentioned order had not been made; and the said court may by their order direct the expenses of and incident to such application to be paid as they may see fit.

22. The highway board of any district may from time to time contract for any time not exceeding three years with any person or body of persons, corporate or unincorporate, to repair any highways, turnpike roads, or roads over county or other bridges, or any part thereof, for the repairing of which such persons or body of persons are liable; and any persons or body of persons liable to repair any roads may contract with the highway board for the repairing any highways, inclusive as aforesaid, or any part thereof, which the highway board is liable to make or repair; and the money payable under any contract made in pursuance of this section shall be raised in the same manner and be paid out of the same rates as would have been applicable to defray the expenses of the repair of such highways if no contract had been made in respect thereto.

23. Sect. 34 of the Highway Act, 1862, shall be construed as if, instead of the words "shall be adjudged in the manner provided by the principal act to be put out of repair," the words were substituted, "shall be adjudged in manner provided by the Highway Act, 1862, to be out of repair."

24. The highway board may apply, under sect. 35 of the Highway Act of 1862, for the purpose of making any highway to which that section refers a highway to be repaired and maintained by the parish in which the same is situated, and upon such application being made the same proceedings may be had as upon the application of the person or corporation liable to repair the same.

25. The 74th section of the Highway Act, 1835, shall be repealed, and instead thereof be it enacted, if any horse, mare, gelding, bull, ox, cow, heifer, steer, calf, mule, ass, sheep, lamb, goat, kid, or swine is at any time found straying on or lying about any highway, or across any part thereof, or by the sides thereof (except on such parts of any highway as pass over any common or waste or uninclosed ground), the owner or owners thereof shall, for every animal so found straying or lying, be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5s. to be recovered in a summary manner, together with the reasonable expense of removing such animal from the highway where it is found to the fields or stable of the owner or owners, or to the common pound (if any) of the parish where the same shall be found, or to such other place as may have been provided for the purpose: provided always, that no owner of any such animal shall in any case pay more than the sum of 12. 10s., to be recovered as aforesaid, over and above such reasonable expenses as aforesaid, including the usual fees and charges of the authorised keeper of the pound: provided also, that nothing in this act shall be deemed to extend to take away any right of pasturage which may exist on the sides of any highway.

26. Any notice in respect of which no other mode of service is provided by the highway board in pursuance of powers in that behalf conferred on them, and any precept, summons, or order issued by the highway board, may be served—

By delivery of the same personally on the party required to be served; or

By leaving the same at the usual or last known place of abode of such party as aforesaid; or

By forwarding the same by post as a prepaid letter addressed to the usual or last known place of abode of such party.

In proving service of a document by post it shall be sufficient to prove that the document was properly directed, and that it was put as a prepaid letter into the post-office; and in serving notice on the overseers or the waywardens (if more than one) of any parish it shall be sufficient to serve the same on any one of such officers in a parish.

27. The schedule annexed to the Highway Act of 1862 shall be repealed so far as relates to the proceedings of highway boards, and the proceedings of highway boards shall, after the passing of this act, be subject to the regulations contained in the first schedule to this act annexed.

28. The 43rd section of the Highway Act of 1862 shall be construed as if in the second article thereof the words "not exceeding 5l." were omitted.

29. A justice of the peace acting for the county in which a highway district is situate, if he is resident in any place which is prohibited either altogether or without the consent of the local authority from being included in a highway district by the 7th section of the Highway Act of 1862, and which is surrounded by or adjoins in any part such highway district, shall, by virtue of his office, be a member of the highway board of such district, subject to this qualification, that if in pursuance of this section any justice of the peace would be entitled to be a member of two or more highway boards in the same county, he shall, by letter under his hand, addressed to the clerk of the highway board for which he elects to act, and by him to be transmitted to the clerk of the peace of the county, declare of which of the said highway boards he elects to be a member, and having made that election he shall be bound thereby, and shall not be entitled by virtue of his office of justice to be a member of any other of the said boards.

30. The appointment of any officer of a highway board may be made by a minute of the board, signed by the chairman and countersigned by the clerk of the board, and any appointment so made shall be as valid as if it were made under the seal of the board.

31. The power of appointing paid collectors of highway rates with the consent of the inhabitants in vestry assembled, which is vested in a surveyor by the Highway Act, 1835, and all the provisions of that act relating to such appointment, shall be vested in and extend to any waywarden required to levy rates in pursuance of the Highway Act, 1862, and this act, or either of such acts; and for the purposes of this act any meeting of ratepayers entitled to elect a waywarden or waywardens shall be deemed to be included under the expression "inhabitants in vestry assembled," as used in this section and the Highway Acts.

As to Expenses of Board.

32. Sects. 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 of the Highway Act, 1862, relating to the expenses of the board, shall be repealed, but such repeal shall not affect any rate made previously to the passing of this act, or any legal proceeding or remedy for enforcing the same.

The salaries of the officers appointed for each district, and any other expenses incurred by any highway board for the common use or benefit of the several parishes within such district, shall be annually charged to a district fund to be contributed by and charged upon the several highway parishes within such district in proportion to the rateable value of the property in each parish, but the expenses of maintaining and keeping in repair the highways of each highway parish within the district, and all other expenses legally payable by the highway board in relation to such parish, including any sums of money that would have been payable out of the highway rates of such parish if the same had not become part of a highway district, except such expenses as are in this act authorised to be charged to the district fund, shall be a separate charge on each parish.

The rateable value of the property in each parish shall be ascertained according to the valuation list or other estimate for the time being in force in such parish for the purposes of the poor rate, or if no such valuation list or estimate be in force, then in such manner as may be determined by the justices in petty sessions, subject to an appeal by any person aggrieved to the next general or quarter sessions.

33. For the purpose of obtaining payment from the several highway parishes within their district of the sums to be contributed by them, the highway board shall order precepts to be issued to the waywardens or overseers of the said parishes according to the provisions hereinafter contained, stating the sum to be contributed by each parish, and requiring the officer to whom the precept is addressed, within a time to be limited by the precept, to pay the sum therein mentioned to the treasurer of the board.

Where a highway parish is not a parish separately maintaining its own poor, or where in any highway parish it has, for a period of not less than seven years immediately preceding the passing of the Highway Act, 1862, been the custom of the surveyor of highways for such parish to levy a highway rate in respect of property not subject by law to be assessed to poor rates, the precept of the highway board shall be addressed to the waywarden of the parish, and in all other cases it shall be addressed to the overseers.

Where the precept is addressed to a waywarden he shall pay the sum thereby required out of a separate rate, and such separate rate shall in the case of a parish in which for such period aforesaid it has been the custom of the surveyor of highways to levy a highway rate in respect of property not subject by law to be assessed to poor rate, be assessed on and levied from the persons and in respect of the property on, from, and in respect of which the same has been assessed and levied during such period as aforesaid, and in all other cases such rate shall be assessed on and levied from the persons and in respect of the property on, from, and in respect of which a poor rate would be assessable and leviable if the parish of which he is waywarden were a place separately maintaining its own poor.

No rate leviable by a waywarden under this act shall be payable until the same has been published in manner in which rates for the relief of the poor are by law required to be published.

A waywarden shall account to the highway board for the amount of all rates levied by him, and at the expiration of his term of office shall pay any surplus in his hands arising from any rate so levied, above the amount for which the rate was made, to the treasurer of the highway board, to the credit of the parish within which such rate was made, and such surplus shall go in reduction of the next highway rate that may be leviable in such parish.

Where the precept is addressed to the overseers they shall pay the sum thereby required out of a poor rate to be levied by them, or out of any monies in their hands applicable to the relief of the poor.

No contribution required to be paid by any parish at any one time in respect of highway rates shall exceed the sum of 10d. in the pound, and the aggregate of contributions required to be paid by any parish in any one year in respect of highway rates shall not exceed the sum of 2s. 6d. in the pound, except with the consent of four-fifths of the ratepayers of the parish in which such excess may be levied present at a meeting specially called for the purpose, of which ten days previous notice has been given by the waywarden of such parish, and then only to such extent as may be determined by such meeting.

All sums of money payable in pursuance of the precepts of a highway board shall, whether they are or not payable by the overseers of the poor, be subject to all charges to which ordinary highway rates are subject by law.

34. All waywardens and overseers to whom precepts of a highway board are hereby directed or authorised to be issued shall, within their respective parishes, have the same powers, remedies, and privileges, for and in respect of assessing and levying any rates required to be levied for making payments to a highway board, in the case of overseers, as they have in assessing and levying ordinary rates for the relief of the poor, and in the case of waywardens, as they would have if the parish of which they are waywardens were a place separately maintaining its own poor, and they were overseers thereof, and the rate to be levied by them were a duly authorised poor rate.

35. If any payment required to be made by the overseers or waywardens of any parish of monies due to a highway board is in arrear, it shall be lawful for any justice, on application under the hand of the chairman for the time being, or by the clerk of such board, to summon the said overseers or waywardens to shew cause at petty sessions why such payment has not been made; and the justices at such petty sessions, after hearing the complaint preferred on behalf of the board, may, if they think fit, cause the amount of payment in arrear, together with the costs occasioned by such arrear, to be levied and recovered from the said overseers or waywardens, or any of them, in like manner as monies assessed for the relief of the poor may be levied and recovered, and the amount of such arrear, together with the costs aforesaid, when levied and recovered, to be paid to the said board.

Accounts of Board.

36. The 25th, 26th, and 30th sections of the Highway Act, 1802, shall be repealed, but such repeal shall not affect any proceeding commenced previously to the passing of this act, and instead thereof the following provisions shall be enacted; that is to say,

The accounts of every highway board shall be made up and balanced to the 31st December every year.

After the expiration of not less than fourteen days, nor more than twenty-eight days from the 31st December, the accounts shall be examined by the board, and signed by the chairman.

The board may, if they think fit, appoint any fit person not being a member or officer of the board to audit their accounts, and may award to him a reasonable compensation, to be paid out of the district fund.

Within thirty days after the signature of the accounts by the chairman the board shall cause a statement shewing the receipt and expenditure in respect of each parish, and the apportioned part of expenditure chargeable thereto in respect of the district fund, and such other particulars, and in such form, as the Secretary of State may direct, to be printed, and sent by post or otherwise to each member of the board, and to the overseers of every parish within the district having overseers; and the clerk of the board shall furnish a copy of such statement to any ratepayer or owner of property situate within the district, on his application, and on the payment of a sum not exceeding 1d.

The books of account of the board shall at all reasonable times be open to the inspection of any ratepayer of any highway parish within the district of the board.

37. If any person feels aggrieved by any rate levied on him for the purpose of raising moneys payable under a precept of a highway board on the ground of incorrectness in the valuation of any property included in such rate, or of any person being put on or left out of such rate, or of the inequality or unfairness of the sum charged on any person or persons therein, he may appeal to the justices in special sessions in manner provided by the act of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, ss. 6, 7, and all the provisions of the said sections shall be applicable to such appeal.

38. Where any waywarden of a highway parish of a district, or any ratepayer of such parish, feels aggrieved in respect of the matters following:—

- (1). In respect of any order of the highway board for the repair of any highway in his parish on the ground that such highway is not legally repairable by the parish, or in respect of any other order of the board on the ground that the matter to which such order relates is one in regard to which the board have no jurisdiction to make an order;
- (2). In respect of any item of expense charged to the separate account of his parish on the ground that such item of expense has not in fact been incurred, or has been incurred in respect of a matter upon which the board have no authority by law to make any expenditure whatever;
- (3). In respect of any item of expenditure charged to the district fund on the ground that such item of expense has not in fact been incurred, or has been incurred in respect of a matter upon which the board has no authority by law to make any expenditure whatever;
- (4). In respect of the contribution required to be made by each parish to the district fund, on the ground that such amount, when compared with the contribution of other parishes in the district, is not according to the proportion required by this act;

he may, upon complying with the conditions hereinafter mentioned, appeal to the court of general or quarter sessions having jurisdiction in the district; but no appeal shall be had in respect of any exercise of the discretion of the board in matters within their discretion; and no appeal shall be had, except in respect of the matters and upon the grounds hereinafter mentioned.

39. No appeal shall be entertained by any court of general or quarter sessions, in pursuance of this act, unless the following conditions have been complied with:—

- (1). Notice of the intention of appeal must be served by the appellant on the clerk of the highway board, in the case of an appeal against an order, within two months after the order; and in the case of an appeal in respect of any item of expense or contribution, within one month after the statement of the account of the board has been sent to each member of the board, as hereinbefore mentioned;

- (2). The notice must state the matter appealed against, and the ground of the appeal:

On the receipt of the notice, the board may serve a counter-notice on the appellant, requiring him to appear in person or by his agent at the next meeting of the board, and support his appeal. On hearing the appellant, the board may rectify the matter complained of; and if they do so to a reasonable extent, and tender to the appellant a reasonable sum for the costs of his attendance, it shall not be lawful for the appellant to proceed with his appeal. In any other case the appellant may proceed with his appeal, and the reasonable costs of his attendance on the board shall be deemed part of the costs of the appeal.

40. If at any time after notice of appeal has been given, it appears to the court of general or quarter sessions, on the application of either party, in the presence of or after notice has been given to the other party, that the matter in question in such appeal consists wholly, or in part, of matters of mere account which cannot be satisfactorily tried by the court, it shall be lawful for such court to order that such matters, either wholly or in part, be referred to the arbitration of one or more persons, to be appointed by the parties, or, in case of disagreement, by the court; and the award made on such arbitration shall be enforceable by the same process as the order of the court of quarter sessions.

41. The provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, relating to compulsory references, shall be deemed to extend to arbitrations directed by the court of quarter sessions; and the word "court" in the said act shall be deemed to include the court of quarter sessions.

42. If upon the hearing of the appeal, it appears to the court that the question in dispute involves an inquiry as to whether a road is or is not a highway repairable by the public, or an inquiry as to any other important matter of fact, the court may either themselves decide such question, or may impanel a jury of twelve disinterested men out of the persons returned to serve as jurymen at such quarter sessions, and submit to such jury such questions in relation to the matters of fact in dispute as the court think fit; and the verdict of such jury, after hearing the evidence adduced, shall be conclusive as to the questions submitted to them.

The questions so submitted shall be in the form, and shall be tried as nearly as may be in the manner, in which feigned issues are ordinarily tried, and the court shall decide the parties to be plaintiffs and defendants in such trials.

Subject as aforesaid, the court may, upon the hearing of any appeal under this act, confirm, reverse, or modify any order of the highway board, or rectify any account appealed against.

43. If the appellant is successful, the costs shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be paid by the board, and shall be charged to the parishes within the jurisdiction of the board other than the parish to which the appellant belongs, in the same proportions in which such parishes contribute to the common fund of the board.

If the appellant is unsuccessful, the board, if the waywarden be the appellant, may charge the costs of the appeal to the parish to which the appellant belongs, in the same manner as if they were expenses incurred in repairing the roads in such parish, and may levy the sum accordingly, and may carry the sum so levied to the account of the several parishes within the jurisdiction of the board, other than the parish to which the appellant waywarden belongs, in the same manner as if they were expenses contributed by such parishes to the common fund of the board; but if some ratepayer other than the waywarden is the appellant, the court may order the costs of the appeal to be paid by such appellant; and such costs shall be recoverable in the same manner as a penalty is recovered under the Highway Act, 1802.

44. Places situate in different counties, and places situate partly in one county and partly in another county, when united in one highway district, shall, for all matters connected with the provisions of this act relating to appeals to quarter sessions against accounts, be deemed to be subject to the jurisdiction of the justices of the county in which the district is situate to which such places shall have been united by any provisional and final order or orders, or to which after the passing of this act any such district shall be declared to be subject by the orders constituting the same, in the same manner as if all such places or parts of places were situate in such county.

Supplemental Provisions.

45. If the highway board of a district make default in appointing a treasurer, clerk, and district surveyor, or any of such officers, in pursuance of the Highway Act, 1862, within three months after the day fixed by the justices for the holding of the first meeting of the board, or within three months after a vacancy occurring in any of the said offices, the justices in general or quarter sessions assembled may, if they think fit, appoint a person to any of the said offices in respect of which the default has been made, and may fix the salary to be paid to the officer appointed; and any such appointment shall take effect and salary be recoverable in the same manner as if the officer appointed by the justices had been appointed by the highway board of the district; and it shall not be lawful for such board, without the consent of the said justices, to remove any officer appointed by them under this section, or to lessen his salary within one year from the date of his appointment.

46. The justices assembled in petty sessions at their usual place of meeting may exercise any jurisdiction which they are authorised under the Highway Acts, or any of them, to exercise in special sessions; and no justice of the peace shall be disabled from acting as such at any petty or special or general quarter sessions in any matter merely on the ground that he is by virtue of his office a member of any highway board complaining, interested, or concerned in such matter, or has acted as such at any meeting of such board.

47. A highway board may make such improvements as are hereinafter mentioned in the highways within their jurisdiction, and may, with the approval of the justices in general or quarter sessions assembled, borrow money for the purpose of defraying the expenses of such improvements:

Previously to applying for the approval of the justices the highway board shall cause an estimate of the expense of the improvements to be made, and two months at the least before making their application shall give notice of their intention so to do.

The notice shall state the following particulars:

- (1). The nature of the work, the estimated amount of expense to be incurred, and the sum proposed to be borrowed:
- (2). The parish or parishes within the district by which the sum borrowed and the interest thereon is to be paid, and in case of more parishes than one being made liable to pay the principal and interest the annual amounts to be contributed by each parish towards the payment thereof:
- (3). The number of years within which the principal moneys borrowed are to be paid off, not exceeding twenty years, and the amount to be set apart in each year for paying off the same:
- (4). The seasons at which the application is to be made.

Notice shall be given as follows:

- (1). By transmitting a copy to the clerk of the peace for the county or division:
- (2). By placing a copy of such notice for three successive Sundays on the church door of every church of the parish or parishes on behalf of which such works are to be done, or, in the case of any place not having a church, in some conspicuous position in such place.

Upon the hearing of the application any person or persons may oppose the approval of the justices being given, and it shall be lawful for the justices to give or withhold their approval, with or without modification, as they think just.

All moneys borrowed in pursuance of this act, together with the interest thereon, shall be a first charge on the highway rates of each parish liable to contribute to the payment thereof, after paying the sums due to the highway board on account of the district fund, in the same manner, so far as the creditor is concerned, as if the money had been borrowed on account of each parish alone; and the sums necessary to repay the said borrowed moneys, with interest, shall in each such parish be recoverable in the same manner as if they were expenses incurred by the board in keeping in repair the highways of that parish.

But it shall be the duty of the highway board, in case of any one parish paying more than its share of such borrowed money, or of the interest thereon, to make good to that parish the excess so paid out of the rates of the other parishes liable to contribute thereto.

The justices may from time to time make general orders in relation to the mode in which applications are to be made to them for their consent under this act to the borrowing of any monies.

48. The following works shall be deemed to be improvements of highways:—

- (1). The conversion of any road that has not been stoned into a stoned road:
- (2). The widening of any road, the cutting off the corners in any road where land is required to be purchased for that purpose, the levelling roads, the making any new road, and the building or enlarging bridges:
- (3). The doing of any other work in respect of highways beyond ordinary repairs essential to placing any existing highway in a proper state of repair.

49. Any parish may, with the consent of its waywarden, contribute to any improvements made in another parish, whether situate or not in the same district, if such first-mentioned parish consider such improvements to be for its benefit; and any highway board may contribute to any improvements made in another district, if such improvements are, in the opinion of the highway board of the first-mentioned district, for the benefit of their district. The contribution to be made by one parish to another shall be payable in the same manner as if such contributions were moneys due from the contributing parish in respect of expenses incurred in keeping in repair the highways of that parish, and moneys contributed by one district to another district shall be payable out of the common fund of the contributing district.

50. The clauses of the Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847, with respect to mortgages to be created by the commissioners, shall form part of and be incorporated with this act, and any mortgages or assignees may enforce payment of his principal and interest by appointment of a receiver.

In the construction of the said clauses "the commissioners" shall mean "the highway board."

Mortgages and transfers of mortgages shall be valid if made in the forms prescribed by the last-mentioned act, or in the forms appearing in the second schedule annexed to this act, or as near thereto as circumstances admit.

51. From and after the passing of this act if any person shall encroach by making or causing to be made any building, or pit, or hedge, ditch, or other fence, or by placing any dung, compost, or other materials for dressing land, or any rubbish, on the side or sides of any carriageway or cartway within fifteen feet of the centre thereof, or by removing any soil or turf from the side or sides of any carriageway or cartway, except for the purposes of improving the road, and by order of the highway board, or, where there is no highway board, of the surveyor, he shall be subject on conviction for every such offence to any sum not exceeding 40s., notwithstanding that the whole space of fifteen feet from the centre of such carriageway or cartway has not been maintained with stones or other materials used in forming highways; and it shall be lawful for the justices assembled at petty sessions, upon proof to them made upon oath, to levy the expenses of taking down such building, hedge, or fence, or filling up such ditch or pit, and removing such dung, compost, materials, or rubbish as aforesaid, or restoring the injury caused by the removal of such soil or turf, upon the person offending: provided always, that where any carriageway or cartway is fenced on both sides no encroachment as aforesaid shall be allowed whereby such carriageway or cartway shall be reduced in width to less than thirty feet between the fences on each side.

52. The highway board may and is hereby authorised to contract for purchasing, getting, and carrying the materials required for the repair of the highways, and for maintaining and keeping in repair all or any part of the highways of any parish within their highway district, for any period not exceeding three years.

53. A highway board for the purpose of improving the highways within their district may purchase such lands or easements relating to lands as they may require; and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the act amending the same passed in the session of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, shall be incorporated with this act, with the exception of the clauses relating to the purchase of land otherwise than by agreement.

In the construction of this act and the said incorporated acts this act shall be deemed to be the special act, and the board shall be deemed to be the promoters of the undertaking, and the word "land" or "lands" shall include any easement in or out of lands.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

Proceedings of Highway Boards.

1. The board shall meet for the despatch of business, and shall from time to time make such regulations with respect to the summoning, notice, place, management, and adjournment of such meetings, and generally with respect to the transaction and management of business, including the quorum at meetings of the board, as they think fit, subject to the following conditions:—
 - (a). The first meeting after the formation of the district shall be held at the time and place fixed by the order of the justices in that behalf;
 - (b). One ordinary meeting shall be held in each period of four months, and of such meetings one shall be held on some day between the 7th and 14th April;
 - (c). An extraordinary meeting may be summoned at any time, on the requisition of three members of the board, addressed to the clerk of the board;
 - (d). The quorum to be fixed by the board shall consist of not less than three members;
 - (e). Every question shall be decided by a majority of votes of the members voting on that question;
 - (f). The names of the members present at a meeting shall be recorded.
2. The board shall at the first meeting, and afterwards from time to time at their first meeting after each annual appointment of members of the board as hereafter mentioned, appoint one of their members to be chairman, and one other of their members to be a vice-chairman, for the year following such choice.
3. If any casual vacancy occur in the office of chairman or vice-chairman, the board shall, as soon as they conveniently can after the occurrence of such vacancy, choose some member of their number to fill such vacancy; and every such chairman or vice-chairman so elected as last aforesaid shall continue in office so long only as the person in whose place he may be so elected would have been entitled to continue if such vacancy had not happened.
4. If at any meeting the chairman is not present at the time appointed for holding the same, the vice-chairman shall be the chairman of the meeting; and if neither the chairman nor vice-chairman shall be present, then the members present shall choose some one of their number to be a chairman of such meeting.
5. In case of an equality of votes at any meeting, the chairman for the time being of such meeting shall have a second or casting vote.
6. All orders of the board for payment of money, and all precepts issued by the board, shall be deemed to be duly executed if signed by two or more members of the board authorised to sign them by a resolution of the board, and countersigned by the clerk; but it shall not be necessary, in any legal proceeding, to prove that the members signing any such order or precept were authorised to sign them, and such authority shall be presumed until the contrary is proved.

CAP. CII.

An Act for amending the Harwich Harbour Act, 1863.
[29th July, 1864.]

CAP. CIII.

An Act to authorise the Acquisition of Lands by the Admiralty with a View to the Extension of Portsmouth Dockyard, and for other Purposes connected therewith.
[29th July, 1864.]

CAP. CIV.

An Act to extend the Powers of the Public Works (Manufacturing Districts) Act, 1863.
[29th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Charge on Consolidated Fund of $50,000l., to be at the disposal of the Public Works Loan Commissioners.

2. Stats. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 80, incorporated.

3. Power to Poor-law Board to make orders extended.

4. Extension of borrowing powers in certain cases.

5. Local authorities may allow owners to repay expenses of private improvement works in thirty years, with interest at 3l. 10s. per cent.

6. Construction of terms.

7. Short title.

Whereas, by the Public Works (Manufacturing Districts) Act, 1863, hereinafter called the Special Act, power was given to charge the Consolidated Fund with 1,200,000l., to be at the disposal of the Public Works Loan Commissioners, who were thereby empowered to make (with the authority of an order of the Poor-law Board) advances out of the money for the time being at their disposal, whether under the special act or any other act, for the purpose of enabling local authorities in the counties therein mentioned to give employment to the labouring and manufacturing classes, by execution of works of public utility and sanitary improvement: and whereas sundry advances have been made by the said commissioners in exercise of the powers conferred upon them by the Special Act, and great benefits have been derived therefrom: and whereas the sums remaining at the disposal of the said commissioners are insufficient to meet the further advances required for effecting the objects hereinbefore mentioned, and it is expedient to make provision for that purpose, and for extending for a further period the power of the Poor-law Board to make orders for loans under the special act: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. For the purposes of loans under the Special Act,

* Highway rate includes poor rate, when the highways are maintained out of poor rate. See sect. 33 of act.

† Highway parish means every parish that separately returns a waywarden or waywardens to the highway board. See sect. 3 of act.

‡ The mortgage must be under the corporate seal of the board, and duly stamped. See Commissioners Clauses Act, 10 Vict. c. 18, s. 75.

§ The transfer must be under seal and duly stamped. See sect. 77 of Commissioners Clauses Act, 10 Vict. c. 18 the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may from time to time, by warrant under the hands of two or more of them, cause to be issued out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, or the growing produce thereof, to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, any further sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole 350,000*l.*, such money to be applied exclusively under the Special Act, and to be at the disposal of the Public Works Loan Commissioners, in like manner in all respects as money placed at their disposal under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 80, and the acts therein recited, subject nevertheless to the provisions of the Special Act and this act, which provisions shall have full effect, notwithstanding anything in the Public Works Loan Act, 1853, to the contrary contained.

2. All the several clauses, powers, authorities, provisoes, enactments, directions, regulations, restrictions, privileges, priorities, advantages, penalties, and forfeitures contained in, and conferred and imposed by, the said act of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 80, and the acts therein recited, or any of them, so far as the same can be made applicable, and are not varied by the Special Act or this act, shall be taken to extend to this act, and to everything to be done in pursuance of this act, and as if the same were herein repeated and set forth.

3. The power of the Poor-law Board to make orders for loans conferred by the Special Act shall be extended until the 1st January, 1865.

4. Where any local board, or local or other authority, propose to contribute to, purchase, or execute, by means of a loan under the Special Act and this act, any works of sewerage or water supply, the cost whereof, in addition to, and inclusive of, the amount of any advances to such local board, or local or other authority, previously authorised under the Special Act or this act, is estimated to exceed one year's rateable value of the property assessable within the district in respect of which such loan is required, the Poor-law Board may by their order authorise such local board, or local or other authority, to borrow, and the Public Works Loan Commissioners may thereupon lend, for such works, an amount not exceeding, together with the advances previously authorised under the Special Act or this act, two years' rateable value of the property assessable within the district in respect of which such loan is required.

5. Where any local board of health, or local or other authority, shall execute any private improvement works by means of a loan under the Special Act or this act, such local board, or local or other authority, may allow the owner of the premises in respect of which such works shall be undertaken to repay the expenses for which such owner may have become liable, either by virtue of the provisions of the Local Government Act, 1858, or of any local act, by equal annual instalments not exceeding thirty, with interest at not less than the rate of 3*l.* 10*s.* per centum per annum upon the sum from time to time remaining unpaid; and the instalments from time to time due shall, together with interest as aforesaid, be recoverable in like manner in all respects as the expenses for which an owner is made liable for private improvement works under the Local Government Act, 1858, or any local act in force in the place where such works have been executed respectively.

6. The terms used in this act shall be construed in like manner as in the Special act, and sect. 21 of that act shall be construed as having included parishes and townships under separate boards of guardians.

7. The Special Act and this act may be cited and described for all purposes as "The Public Works (Manufacturing Districts) Acts, 1863, 1864."

CAP. CV.

An Act to explain the Statutes of Her present Majesty for amending the Laws relating to the Removal of the Poor.
[20th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Residence in the parish of a settlement not to be excluded in the computation of period of residence.

2. Not to apply to orders of removal executed.

3. Construction of act.

Whereas it is enacted in the 1st section of the stat. 25 Vict. c. 55, that after the 25th March then next the period of three years should be substituted for that of five years specified in the 1st section of the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and that the residence of a person in any part of a union should have the same effect in reference to the provisions of the said section as a residence in any parish: and whereas doubts exist as to the proper meaning of this latter provision, and it is desirable to remove the same: be it therefore declared and enacted, &c.

Sect. 1. That in the case of any poor person heretofore chargeable or hereafter becoming chargeable in any parish comprised in a union not being the parish of his settlement, the period of time during which he shall have resided in the parish of the settlement, if in the same union, shall not be excluded in the computation of the time of residence required to render him exempt from removal under the statutes above referred to.

2. Nothing herein contained shall apply to any order of removal made and executed before the passing of this act.

3. The words of this act shall be construed in the same manner as the said first-mentioned act.

CAP. CVI.

An Act to authorise the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to make Provision in regard to the Salaries of certain Sheriffs Substitute in Scotland.
[20th July, 1864.]

An Act to confirm a Provisional Order under the Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Act, 1863.
[20th July, 1864.]

CAP. CVIII.

An Act to amend the West Indian Incumbered Estates Acts.
[20th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Short title.

2. Definition of principal act, &c.

3. Provision as to acts coming into operation.

4. Power to include stock in sales.

5. Power to appoint receiver of lands and stock after conditional order for sale.

CAP. CIX.

An Act for providing a further Sum towards defraying the Expenses of constructing Fortifications for the Protection of the Royal Arsenals and Dockyards, and the Ports of Dover and Portland, and of creating a Central Arsenal.
[20th July, 1864.]

CAP. CX.

An Act for the Amendment of the Law relating to the Mitigation of Penalties.
[20th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Justices prohibited from mitigating penalties under general powers of local act.

2. Short title.

Whereas, by various public acts of Parliament, penalties are imposed in respect of certain offences, and it is provided that such penalties are not to be reduced below the limits in such acts specified: and whereas the provisions of the said public acts are contravened by special enactments introduced into certain local acts, empowering the justices or court having cognisance of offences in certain localities to mitigate all penalties in respect of such offences: and whereas it is expedient to prevent such contravention as aforesaid of the general law: be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. Where any public act of Parliament provides, that in respect of any offence therein mentioned a penalty is to be imposed of not less than a particular sum of money, or of not less than a certain term of imprisonment or other punishment therein specified, it shall not be lawful for the justices or court having cognisance of such offence to mitigate such penalty below the limit specified in that act of Parliament, in pursuance of any power of mitigating penalties conferred on such justices or court by any local or private act of Parliament.

2. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Limited Penalties Act, 1864."

CAP. CXI.

An Act to transfer certain Houses in and near Cranbourne-street, in the City of Westminster, from the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works to Her Majesty, for the Considerations therein mentioned. [29th July, 1864.]

CAP. CXII.

An Act to amend the Law relating to future Judgments, Statutes, and Recognisances. [29th July, 1864.]

- Sect. 1. Future judgments, &c. not to affect land until land delivered in execution.
 2. Interpretation of terms.
 3. Writs of execution to be registered in manner prescribed by the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38.
 4. Creditor to whom land delivered in execution entitled to obtain summary order from Court of Chancery for sale.
 5. Where there are other creditors, notice of sale to be served upon them.
 6. Parties claiming interest through debtor bound by order for sale.
 7. Extent of act.

Whereas it is desirable to assimilate the law affecting freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates to that affecting purely personal estates in respect of future judgments, statutes, and recognisances: therefore be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. No judgment, statute, or recognisance to be entered up after the passing of this act shall affect any land (of whatever tenure) until such land shall have been actually delivered in execution by virtue of a writ of elegit or other lawful authority, in pursuance of such judgment, statute, or recognisance.

2. In the construction of this act the term "judgment" shall be taken to include registered decrees, orders of courts of equity and bankruptcy, and other orders having the operation of a judgment; and the term "land" shall be taken to include all hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, or any interest therein; and the term "debtor" shall be taken to include husbands of married women, assignees of bankrupts, committees of lunatics, and the heirs or devisees of deceased persons.

3. Every writ or other process of execution of any such judgment, statute, or recognisance, by virtue whereof any land shall have been actually delivered in execution, shall be registered in the manner provided by an act passed in the session of the 23 & 24 Vict. [c. 38], intituled "An Act to further amend the Law of Property," but in the name of the debtor against whom such writ or process is issued, instead of, as under the said act, in the name of the creditor; and no other or prior registration of such judgment, statute, or recognisance shall be or be deemed necessary for any purpose; and no reference to any such prior registration shall be required to be made in or by the memorandum or minute of such writ or other process of execution which shall be left with the senior master of the Court of Common Pleas for the purpose of such registry.

4. Every creditor to whom any land of his debtor shall have been actually delivered in execution by virtue of any such judgment, statute, or recognisance, and whose writ or other process of execution shall be duly registered, shall be entitled forthwith, or at any time afterwards while the registry of such writ or process shall continue in force, to obtain from the Court of Chancery, upon petition in a summary way, an order for the sale of his debtor's interest in such land, and every such petition may be served upon the debtor only; and thereupon the court shall direct all such inquiries to be made as to the nature and particulars of the debtor's interest in such land, and his title thereto, as shall appear to be necessary or proper; and in making such inquiries, and generally in carrying into effect such order for sale, the practice of the said court with respect to sales of real estates of deceased persons for the payment of debts shall be adopted and followed, so far as the same may be found conveniently applicable.

5. If it shall appear on making such inquiries that any other debt due on any judgment, statute, or recognisance is a charge on such land, the creditor entitled to the benefit of such charge (whether prior or subsequent to the charge of the petitioner) shall be served with notice of the said order for sale, and shall after such service be bound thereby, and shall be at liberty to attend the proceedings under the same, and to have the benefit thereof; and the proceeds of such sale shall be distributed among the persons who may be found entitled thereto, according to their respective priorities.

6. Every person claiming any interest in such land through or under the debtor, by any means subsequent to the delivery of such land in execution as aforesaid, shall be bound by every such order for sale, and by all the proceedings consequent thereon.

7. This act shall not extend to Ireland.

CAP. CXIII.

An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Conservancy of the River Thames; and for other Purposes relating thereto. [29th July, 1864.]

91. Officers to render account of fees received to the Treasury. To be paid over to the Consolidated Fund.

Whereas an act was passed in the 12 & 13 Vict. [c. 100], intituled "An Act to promote the Advance of private Money for Drainage of Lands in Great Britain and Ireland," and several companies have been incorporated by act of Parliament, with special powers for promoting the improvement of land in Great Britain and Ireland by drainage and otherwise; and it is desirable to amend and consolidate the law relating to the improvement of land by owners of limited interests, and to enable such owners to charge their lands with money subscribed for the construction of railways and navigable canals which will permanently increase the value of such lands: be it enacted &c., as follows:—

1. The act first above mentioned, being the Private Money Drainage Act, 1849, is hereby repealed, except so far as relates to any proceedings on applications pending under the said act at the date of the passing hereof, it being the intention hereof that all such proceedings shall be worked out under the said act, and that all charges to be made in consequence of any such proceedings shall be made and operate under the said act, which shall apply thereto as if this act had never been passed: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall affect any charge made under the said act before the passing hereof, or any right or obligation existing or which may arise in respect of any such charge.

And with regard to the commissioners for the execution of this act, and other general matters, be it enacted as follows:—

2. By "the commissioners" shall herein be meant, as regards lands in Great Britain, the Inclosure Commissioners for England and Wales, and as regards lands in Ireland, the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland under an act of the 1 & 2 Will. 4 [c. 33], intituled "An Act for the Extension and Promotion of Public Works in Ireland," and an act of the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 89], intituled "An Act to promote Drainage of Lands, and Improvement of Navigation and Water Power in connexion with Drainage, in Ireland," and the several acts amending the same respectively.

3. All the provisions of the act of the 9 & 10 Vict. [c. 101], intituled "An Act to authorise the Advance of Public Money to a limited amount to promote the Improvement of Land in Great Britain and Ireland by Works of Drainage," and of any and every other act for the time being in force relating to any of the aforesaid commissioners, so far as the same may concern or be auxiliary to the proceedings or inquiries of the commissioners under the authority of such acts or any of them, or the authentication of instruments, shall, except as in this act otherwise provided, extend and be applicable to their proceedings and inquiries, and the authentication of instruments, under this act.

4. Every assistant commissioner or inspector acting in any matter, inquiry, or proceeding by the authority and in the execution of this act may receive declarations and statements, and examine upon declaration all such persons as may voluntarily attend before him in such matter, inquiry, or proceeding.

5. If any person shall wilfully give false evidence in any matter, inquiry, or proceeding under the provisions of this act, or shall make or subscribe a false statement or declaration for the purposes of this act, such person shall, in England or Ireland, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and shall be punished accordingly.

6. Any notice requiring to be served upon the commissioners may be served by the same being left at or transmitted through the post, directed to their office in London.

7. In all cases in which it shall be necessary under the provisions of this act to serve any notice upon any other person, it shall be sufficient to send such notice in a registered post letter, directed to such person at his then or last known place of residence or of business, unless the letter containing such notice shall be returned from the post-office as undelivered; and if such person shall not have any place of residence or of business within Great Britain or Ireland, or if the place of business or of residence of such person cannot with due diligence be ascertained, then such notice may be served upon such other person as his representative, or be given in such other manner as the commissioners shall in such case direct or approve.

8. The word "landowner" shall mean herein, as to lands in England, the person who shall be in the actual possession or receipt of the rents or profits of any land, whether of freehold, copyhold, customary, or other tenure, except where such person shall be tenant for life or lives holding under a lease for life or lives not renewable, or shall be a tenant for years holding under a lease or an agreement for a lease for a term of years not renewable, whereof less than twenty-five years shall be unexpired at the time of making any application to the commissioners, without regard to the real amount of the interest of any person so excepted; and in the case where the person in the actual possession or receipt of the rents or profits of any land shall fall within the above exceptions, then the person who for the time being shall be in the actual receipt of the rent payable by the person so excepted, unless he shall also fall within the above exceptions, shall, jointly with the person who shall be liable to the payment thereof, be deemed for the purposes of this act to be the owner of such lands; and as to lands in Scotland, the word "landowner" shall denote and include every far, liferenter, or heir of entail who shall be in the actual possession of the land, or in receipt of the rents payable on the tacks, leases, or tenancies of the tenants in the actual possession thereof; and as to lands in Ireland, the word "landowner" shall mean such person as under the act passed in the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 109], intitled "An Act to abolish Compositions for Tithes in Ireland, and to substitute Rent-charges in lieu thereof," shall have the first estate of inheritance, or other estate or interest equivalent to a perpetual estate or interest therein, and also any tenant in dower or by the curtesy, or any person having under the limitations of any settlement by deed, will, act of Parliament or otherwise, any estate for life, or other particular estate thereby created or limited out of or in any estate of inheritance, or by, out of, or in any such estate or interest as by or under the last-mentioned act is to be deemed equivalent to a perpetual estate or interest; and as to lands in any part of the United Kingdom, the word "landowner" shall include a corporation, and also such persons as are empowered by the 23rd section hereof.

9. By "the improvement of land" shall herein be meant all or any of the following matters:—

- (1). The drainage of land, and the straitening, widening, deepening, or otherwise improving the drains, streams, and watercourses of any land:
- (2). The irrigation and warping of land:
- (3). The embanking and weiring of land from the sea or tidal waters, or from lakes, rivers, or streams, in a permanent manner:
- (4). The inclosing of lands, and the straitening of fences and redivision of fields:
- (5). The reclamation of land, including all operations necessary thereto:
- (6). The making of permanent farm roads and permanent tramways and railways and navigable canals for all purposes connected with the improvement of the estate:

- (7). The clearing of land:
 - (8). The erection of labourers' cottages, farmhouses, and other buildings required for farm purposes, and the improvement of and addition to labourers' cottages, farmhouses, and other buildings for farm purposes already erected, so as such improvement or additions be of a permanent nature:
 - (9). Planting for shelter:
 - (10). The constructing or erecting of any engine-houses, waterwheels, saw and other mills, kilns, shafts, wells, ponds, tanks, reservoirs, dams, leads, pipes, conduits, watercourses, bridges, weirs, sluices, flood-gates, or hatches, which will increase the value of any lands for agricultural purposes:
 - (11). The construction or improvement of jetties or landing places on the sea coast, or on the banks of navigable rivers or lakes, for the transport of cattle, sheep, and other agricultural stock and produce, and of lime, manure, and other articles and things for agricultural purposes; provided that the commissioners shall be satisfied that such works will add to the permanent value of the lands to be charged to an extent equal to the expense thereof:
 - (12). The execution of all such works as in the judgment of the commissioners may be necessary for carrying into effect any matter hereinbefore mentioned, or for deriving the full benefit thereof.
10. The word "person" shall in this act include companies and all other corporations.

And with regard to the proceedings preliminary to the sanction of any improvements, be it enacted as follows:—

11. When any landowner shall be desirous of borrowing or advancing money under this act for the improvement of his land, he shall make an application to the commissioners to sanction the proposed improvements in such manner and form, and stating such particulars as the commissioners shall from time to time direct; and until the proposed improvements shall have been sanctioned by the commissioners in manner hereinbefore mentioned, the application may be withdrawn or altered, or consolidated with any other application, at the pleasure of the applicant, but without prejudice to his liability, as hereinafter mentioned, for the expenses incurred by the commissioners or their officers in consequence of his application.

12. Any two or more landowners may, with the consent of the commissioners, join in an application to them to sanction the improvement of the lands of such landowners respectively, but the sum to be charged in pursuance of any such joint application shall be apportioned so that a separate and distinct sum may become charged on the land of each landowner.

13. The commissioners may from time to time frame and circulate, as they shall see occasion, forms indicating the particulars of the information to be furnished to them by landowners for the purposes of this act, and such other forms as the commissioners may deem expedient for facilitating any proceedings under this act.

14. The commissioners may require security to be given to them by the landowner, by bond, deposit, or otherwise, in such form as they may think fit, for the payment to them of the expenses which they or their officers shall incur in respect of the investigation on any application, and, if they shall issue such provisional or other sanctioning order as hereinafter mentioned, of the expenses which they or their officers shall incur in inspecting and ascertaining the due execution of the works; but unless the commissioners shall issue such absolute order as hereinafter mentioned, such payment shall not be a charge on the land to which such application relates, but shall be a debt due by the person making such application to the commissioners, and shall be recoverable by them as in the nature of a Crown debt.

15. If the commissioners shall think fit to entertain the application so made to them, they may cause the land to be inspected and examined by an assistant commissioner, or an engineer or surveyor, who shall have regard to and examine the proposals and statements contained in such application, and shall report his opinion thereon, and who shall also report whether in his judgment the proposed improvements will effect a permanent increase of the yearly value of the land exceeding the yearly amount proposed to be charged thereon in respect of the improvements applied for; and the commissioners may by themselves, or any assistant commissioner, engineer, or surveyor, make such other inquiries in relation to any such application as they shall think fit: provided that the above requisition as to increased annual value shall not apply to any outlay proposed to be made upon, or in respect of, planting only.

16. The commissioners shall have power to require such alterations as they shall think expedient to be made in the improvements proposed, or in the proposed mode of executing them.

17. Before the commissioners shall sanction any improvements, notice shall be given of the application as well by advertisement inserted, in two successive weeks, in some newspaper published in the county in which the land to be improved lies; or in case there shall be no such newspaper published in such county, then in some county adjoining thereto, as by a notice in writing given, where such lands are situate in England or Ireland, to every person entitled to any estate in land, or any part thereof, in reversion or remainder, up to, and inclusive of, the person entitled to the first vested estate of inheritance therein, and to every person entitled to any mortgage upon such land, or any part thereof, who by reasonable inquiry shall be known to be so interested, and given, where such lands are situate in Scotland, to the nearest heir or heirs of entail, not exceeding three, and to the holders of every heritable security on such lands appearing upon the records; and in such advertisements and notices respectively shall be stated the maximum amount which it is proposed to charge in respect of the improvements, and the greatest and least terms over which it is proposed that the rent-charge should be spread; and the commissioners shall not sanction the improvements until one month shall have elapsed from the publication of the second of such advertisements and the service of such notices (if any) respectively, of which publication, and of the service of all necessary notices as aforesaid, the landowner, shall, if required by the commissioners, satisfy them by one or more statutory declarations made by him or on his behalf.

18. In case any person having any estate in or charge or security on the land to be improved shall within the month named in the last preceding section signify in writing to the commissioners his dissent from such application, stating therein the nature of his estate in or charge or security on such land, the commissioners shall certify such dissent to the landowner by whom the application was made, and shall not make any provisional or other order sanctioning the improvements unless or until such dissent be withdrawn, or an order be made by the High Court of Chancery in England or Ireland respectively, or by the Court of Session in Scotland, in manner hereinafter provided, authorising the commissioners to sanction the same; nor shall they make any provisional or other order sanctioning the improvement of any land in the case of which the landowner, or the husband of the landowner, shall be the father of the person or persons entitled either at law or in equity to any estate in such land, or any part thereof, in reversion or remainder, up to and inclusive of the person entitled to the first vested estate of inheritance, and such person or persons, or any of them, shall be an infant or infants, or a minor or minors, unless or until such an order as hereinbefore mentioned shall be made by such court as aforesaid.

19. If the commissioners shall consider that any proposed improvement would interfere with any navigable river or canal respectively vested in or under the management or control of any commissioners, trustees, conservators, undertakers, company, or other body or individuals, or the banks or other works or conveniences thereof, or would occasion the flow or discharge into such river or canal of any drainage or other matter, the landowner shall give notice of the application in writing, together with a plan and section of the proposed improvement, to such commissioners, trustees, conservators, undertakers, company or other body, or individuals; and in case they shall, within one month after the receipt of such notice, signify in writing to the commissioners their dissent from such application, and state the nature of their interest in or authority over such river or canal, the commissioners shall certify such dissent to the landowner by whom the application was made, and shall not sanction the improvement unless or until such dissent be withdrawn, or an order be made by the High Court of Chancery in England or Ireland respectively, or by the Court of Session in Scotland, in manner hereinafter provided, authorising the commissioners to sanction the improvement.

20. When the land to which the application relates, or any part of such land, is held in right of any church, chapel, or other ecclesiastical benefice, the commissioners shall not sanction any improvement of such land, or of so much thereof as is so held, unless and until the patron of the benefice, and in England and Ireland the bishop of the diocese, and in Scotland the Presbytery of the bounds, shall signify to the commissioners, by writing under their hands, their respective consents to such application.

21. If and when any dissent from any such application to the commissioners for their sanction of proposed improvements shall have been notified in writing to the commissioners, either by a party interested in the lands proposed to be improved (not being lands held in right of any church, chapel, or other ecclesiastical benefice), or by the commissioners, trustees, company, or other body or individuals interested in any river or canal which would or might be interfered with as hereinbefore mentioned, or if the landowner, or the husband of the landowner, shall be the father of the person or persons entitled either at law or in equity to any estate in the land to be improved, or any part thereof, in reversion or remainder, up to and inclusive of the person entitled to the first vested estate of inheritance, and such person or persons, or any of them, shall be an infant or infants, or a minor or minors, the landowner desiring such improvements may apply to the High Court of Chancery in England or Ireland where such lands are situate in England or Ireland respectively, or to the Court of Session where such lands are situate in Scotland, for an order of such court authorising the commissioners to entertain and proceed upon the application for such proposed improvements notwithstanding such dissent or circumstance; and such application shall be made, as to lands in England, to the Master of the Rolls or any one of the Vice-Chancellors sitting at chambers, by summons, calling on the party dissenting to shew cause why such order should not be made; as to lands in Ireland, to the Master of the Rolls, by summary petition or otherwise, as he shall by any general order direct; and as to lands in Scotland, to either division of the Court of Session in time of session, or to the Lord Ordinary sitting on bills in time of vacation, by summary petition; and the court or single judge, as the case may be, to whom such application shall be made, shall hear and determine such application, and for that purpose shall have power to make or direct to be made all such inquiries, and receive and entertain all such statements and evidence, on oath or by affidavit, as such court or judge may consider necessary or desirable, or as may be produced before them or him; and if upon a consideration of all the circumstances such court or judge shall be of opinion that the commissioners should entertain and proceed upon such application, an order shall be made authorising and requiring them to proceed thereon, and to deal with the same according to the provisions of this act authorising them in that behalf, notwithstanding such dissent or circumstance as aforesaid: provided, that if at any time after notification of such dissent, and before any such order shall have been applied for and made as aforesaid, such dissent shall be withdrawn by a like notification in writing, it shall not be necessary to make or proceed with such application, or to obtain such order.

22. Where any party dissenting shall be out of the jurisdiction of the court, it shall be lawful for the court or judge to order service to be made in such manner as such court or judge may think fit, and upon proof, to the satisfaction of such court or judge, that such party has had actual notice within a reasonable time of such intended application, it shall be lawful for such court or judge thereupon to hear and determine such application.

23. The costs of and incidental to every application under the 21st and 22nd sections, and the mode in which such costs shall be settled or taxed, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge who shall hear such application, and if such court or judge shall so direct, the said costs shall be deemed to be part of the expenses of, and incidental to, the application for the proposed improvements.

24. All husbands, guardians, tutors, committees, curators, feoffees, trustees, judicial factors, executors, and administrators shall respectively have the same rights and powers of making applications and signifying dissents, and taking other proceedings under this act, as their respective wives, infants, minors, lunatics, idiots, and furious or fatuous persons would have had if free from disability, or as such feoffees, trustees, judicial factors, executors, or administrators respectively would have had if the estates, charges, or interests of which they shall be such feoffees, trustees, or judicial factors, or which shall be vested in them as such executors or administrators, had been vested in them in their own right; but no guardian, tutor, committee, curator, feoffee, trustee, judicial factor, executor, or administrator, shall be in anywise compelled or obliged to signify a dissent from any application under this act, or be in anywise responsible for the consequences of such application, or of any charge made in pursuance thereof.

And with regard to the sanction of any improvements, and the rights arising thereunder, be it enacted as follows:—

25. If the commissioners shall find that the proposed improvements, or any part thereof, whether with or without any alterations by them required or sanctioned, would effect a permanent increase of the yearly value of the lands proposed to be improved, or of any part thereof, exceeding the yearly amount proposed to be charged thereon, they shall sanction such improvements, or such part thereof as they shall think expedient, if under the preceding sections it shall be lawful for them so to do, by an order under their hands and seal; and they shall, by the same order, fix the rate of interest to be allowed on the cost of the sanctioned improvements, having regard to the market value of money at the time; but such interest shall never exceed 5l. per cent. per annum.

26. The commissioners shall from time to time prepare forms of orders for sanctioning improvements, and shall also, whenever required by the landowner so to do, frame and entitle their said orders under this act in such manner that they may also be and operate as provisional, sanctioning, or other corresponding orders under the respective acts applying to any company with which he may have contracted relating to the loan or improvements in question: provided, that every order operating under this act to sanction any improvements shall name the landowner to whom it is issued; shall express the greatest sum to be charged, in addition to any costs, charges, and expenses, under the 50th section hereof, and the rate of interest and term of years for the repayment thereof, the former not exceeding 5l. per cent. per annum, and the latter not exceeding twenty-five years; shall specify the lands on which such repayment is to be charged; and shall either express or refer to some contract or other document expressing the general scheme of the improvements to be executed.

27. Every order operating under this act alone to sanction any improvement may be in the form set forth in Schedule (A.) hereto, and shall be called a provisional order, and shall, subject to the following section hereof, create in favour of the landlord named therein the title to an absolute charge, on the completion of the sanctioned improvements, which title such landowner may assign, either absolutely or by way of security, to any person; and such assignment may be made by indorsement on the provisional order.

28. In case of the death of any landowner, or the determination of his interest, between the date of the provisional order and the completion of the improvements sanctioned thereby, the right to complete such improvements, and to assign the title to an absolute charge, shall pass to the succeeding landowner; but if the succeeding landowner shall not, within three calendar months after his succession, proceed with the works, so as to complete the same in conformity with the provisional order, the preceding landowner, or, in case of his decease, his executors or administrators, may complete such improvements, and shall become entitled to have the absolute charge executed to him or them. If the succeeding landowner shall complete the improvements, there shall be distinct absolute charges executed to such landowner, and the preceding landowner, or his personal representatives, for the outlay made by the preceding and succeeding landowners respectively, and in case of difference, the commissioners shall determine the proportions; provided that the succeeding landowner may, with the sanction of the Inclosure Commissioners, and after notice to the parties to whom notice was originally given, or such of them as may be living, and such other persons, if any, as the commissioners may direct, terminate the proceedings under the provisional order, on payment of the outlay and expenses made thereunder, and indemnifying the person to whom the title to the absolute charge may have been assigned. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, if the title to an absolute charge shall have been assigned by the preceding landowner, the assignee may complete the improvements, if he shall proceed therewith within one calendar month from the time the preceding landowner ceased to be such landowner.

29. The commissioners may from time to time, on application to be made by the landowner, and after such inquiry as they shall think fit, sanction any modifications or alterations either of the scheme of the improvements, or of any other matter expressed or referred to in the provisional order: provided that no such modification or alteration shall increase the sum to be charged in respect of the improvements, or extend or curtail the term of repayment, beyond the greatest amount which it was proposed so to charge, or the greatest or least term over which it was proposed that the rent-charge should be spread, as respectively stated in the advertisement and notices hereinbefore required: provided also, that every such modification or alteration shall require the consent of every party who, by having contracted for the execution of the improvements, or by having taken an assignment of the title to an absolute charge, or otherwise, may be interested therein; and the modifying order shall be in such form as the commissioners shall from time to time appoint, and shall be construed together with the original order as one order, with respect to all rights arising thereunder after the date of the modifying order.

And with regard to the execution of any improvements, be it enacted as follows:—

30. Before the commencement of any improvements sanctioned in manner aforesaid the landowner shall deliver to the commissioner a detailed specification thereof, and in the case of buildings, and also in any other case where the same shall be required by the commissioners, a detailed plan or drawing: provided, that when it is not intended to complete the improvements within one year from the date of the provisional or other sanctioning order, the specification and plan or drawing first delivered may comprise so much only as it is intended to complete within one year from the said date, so, however, that for the works of each successive year such specification and plan or drawing as aforesaid be always delivered in advance.

31. The specifications and plans or drawings aforesaid shall be examined, and, if necessary, the spot visited, by an assistant commissioner, or an engineer or surveyor, who shall report whether, in his judgment, the improvements as proposed to be effected will be effected in a substantial and durable manner, and, in the case of farm buildings, whether the same, or the improvements thereof, or additions thereto, will be suitable to the locality; and no improvement shall be commenced or proceeded with until the specifications and plans or drawings aforesaid shall have been approved by the commissioners; but nothing herein contained shall render necessary the redelivery, re-examination, or reapproval of any detailed specifications, plans, or drawings which may have been delivered in connexion with the application for the commissioners' sanction to the general scheme of the improvements, and may have been approved in connexion with that sanction.

32. All persons interested in any lands adjoining, or near to, the land improved, or proposed to be improved, and being, as to lands in England or Ireland, by the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and as to lands in Scotland, by the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, enabled to sell and dispose of such lands so adjoining or near, or any estate or interest therein, may, for the purpose of any improvements authorised by this act, sell and convey or grant to the landowner whose land has been, or is proposed to be, improved, such lands so adjoining or near, or any part thereof, or any easement, authority, or right in, through, over, or affecting the same, and any such land, easement, authority, or right so sold and conveyed or granted shall thereupon become appurtenant to or pertinent of the lands improved, or proposed so to be, and with reference to the improvements whereof the same was purchased, and shall be held upon and subject to the same uses, trusts, charges, and incidents; and all such persons as aforesaid may also make any agreement with the landowner, or with any person or company that shall have contracted for the actual execution of the improvements, or their respective agents, with reference to entering on, cutting through or into, or prejudicially affecting such lands so adjoining or near; and every such sale, conveyance, grant, and agreement shall be valid and effectual accordingly, and the price or consideration shall be settled by two surveyors or a surveyor to be appointed by them in manner provided by the 9th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or, as the case may be, by the 9th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, and shall be deposited as directed by the same respective sections, and thenceforth become subject to the provisions of the same respective acts.

33. Whenever the commissioners shall think that it may be expedient, in order to obtain or improve an outfall for draining or warping any lands under this act, or otherwise with a view to the improvement of any lands under this act, to enter and execute any works upon any land adjoining or near to the land proposed to be improved, where, by reason of the objection or disability of any owner, lessee, or occupier of such land, such works could not be otherwise executed, proceedings may be taken, if the said lands shall lie in England, either under the provisions of the act of the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 88, intituled "An Act to facilitate the Drainage of Lands in England and Wales," or under those of the third part of the Land Drainage Act, 1861, and, if in Scotland, under the provisions of the act of the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 113, intituled "An Act to facilitate the Drainage of Lands in Scotland," but as though in such act the Inclosure Commissioners for England and Wales had everywhere been named in place of the sheriff; and if such proceedings shall have been taken before the sanction of the improvements in question by the commissioners under this act, the commissioners may, by their order sanctioning such improvements, declare the works in respect of which they shall have been taken to be expedient, and such works shall then be deemed to have been authorised by the commissioners or by the sheriff, as the case may be, and the provisions of the said respective acts shall apply to them accordingly.

34. Every provisional or modifying order shall be a full authority to the landowner or successive landowners and their representatives in the respective cases hereinbefore defined, and to all persons employed by or under contract with him or them respectively, to enter upon the lands to be improved, and any adjoining or neighbouring lands acquired or authorised to be entered under either of the two last preceding sections, and to execute in and on the same, without impeachment of waste by any remainderman or reversioner, all the improvements sanctioned by the same order according to the specifications and plans or drawings approved by the commissioners, and to do, execute, and use all such acts, works, and conveniences as may be proper for making, maintaining, and using such improvements; and for the purpose of effecting any improvement under this or the recited acts, it shall be lawful to get and work freestone, limestone, clay, sand, and any other mineral or substance out of the land to be improved for charged, and to make tramroads and other ways, and to burn and make bricks, tiles, and other things to be used in effecting such improvements, and also for the same purpose to cut down and use any timber or trees not planted or serving for shelter or ornament.

35. Nothing in this act contained shall authorise any person to purchase, take, use, or interfere with, or the commissioners to make any order with respect to any land, soil, or water, or any right in respect thereof, belonging to her Majesty in right of her Crown, without the previous consent in writing of the Commissioners for the time being of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues, or, if the property should be under the management or control of her Majesty's Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, without the consent in writing of such last-mentioned commissioners, which consent the said respective commissioners are hereby authorised to give; and nothing in this act contained shall divert, alter, or affect any of the rights, powers, or estates vested in her Majesty in right of her Crown.

36. Nothing in this act contained shall authorise any person to purchase, take, use, or interfere with, or the commissioners to make any order with respect to any land, soil, or water, or any right in respect thereof, the management or control of which may be vested in the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings on behalf of or in trust for her Majesty or the public, without the consent in writing of the last-mentioned commissioners, which they are hereby authorised to give.

37. Nothing in this act contained shall authorise any person to take, use, enter upon, or interfere with any land, soil, or water, or any rights in respect thereof, belonging to the Sovereign for the time being in right of the Duchy of Cornwall, without the consent in writing of some two or more of the regular officers of the said duchy, or of such other persons as may be duly authorised under the provisions of the Duchy of Cornwall Management Act, 1863, sect. 39, to exercise all or any of the rights, powers, privileges, and authorities by the said act made exercisable or otherwise for the time being exercisable in relation to the said duchy, or belonging to the Duke of Cornwall for the time being, without the consent of such duke, testified in writing under the seal of the Duchy of Cornwall, first had and obtained for that purpose, or to take away, diminish, alter, prejudice, or affect any property, rights, profits, privileges, powers, or authorities vested in or enjoyed by the Duke of Cornwall for the time being, or in or by the Sovereign for the time being in right of the Duchy of Cornwall.

38. Nothing in this act contained shall authorise any person to purchase, take, use, or interfere with any lands, soil, or water, or any right in respect thereof, belonging to her Majesty, her heirs or successors, in right of the Duchy of Lancaster, without the previous consent in writing of the chancellor of the said Duchy of Lancaster, which consent such chancellor is hereby authorised to give, or to take away, lessen, prejudice, or alter any of the rights, privileges, powers, or authorities vested in or enjoyed by her Majesty, her heirs or successors, in right of the said Duchy of Lancaster.

39. Nothing in this act contained shall authorise any person to purchase, take, use, or interfere with any land, soil, or water, or any right in respect thereof, or to take away, lessen, prejudice, or alter any of the rights, privileges, powers, or authorities vested in or enjoyed by the Lord High Admiral, or the Commissioners for the time being for executing the office of Lord High Admiral (hereinafter designated the Admiralty), or vested in or enjoyed by the Lords of the Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations (hereinafter designated the Board of Trade), without the previous consent of the Admiralty signified in writing under the hand of the secretary of the Admiralty (which consent the Admiralty are hereby authorised to give), or, as the case may be, without the previous consent of the Board of Trade signified in writing under the hand of one of the secretaries of the said board.

40. With respect to any harbour, port, bay, estuary, or navigable river, or part thereof, comprised in any notice from time to time given by the Admiralty under sect. 9 of the Harbours Transfer Act, 1862, previously to commencing any work below high-water mark there shall be deposited at the Admiralty-office plans, specifications, and working drawings thereof for the approval of the Admiralty, such approval to be signified in writing under the hand of the Secretary of the Admiralty, and with respect to all other parts where the tide flows, previously to commencing any work below high-water mark there shall be deposited at the office of the Board of Trade plans, specifications, and working drawings thereof for the approval of the Board of Trade, such approval to be signified in writing under the hand of one of the secretaries of the said board, and any such work shall be constructed only in accordance with such respective approval; and when any such work shall have been commenced or constructed, it shall not be lawful at any time to alter or extend the same without obtaining, previously to making any such alteration or extension, the like respective consent or approval; and if any such work shall be commenced or completed, or be altered, extended, or constructed, contrary to the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the Admiralty or the Board of Trade, as the case may require, to abate, alter, and remove the same, and to restore the site thereof to its former condition, at the cost and charge of the person or company that executed the said work, the amount of which cost and charge shall be a debt due from such person or company to the Crown, and be recoverable accordingly, with costs of suit.

41. If at any time or times it shall be deemed expedient by the Admiralty or the Board of Trade, as the case may require, to order a local survey and examination of any embankment or work proposed to be constructed under the powers of this act in, over, or affecting any tidal or navigable water or river, or of the intended site thereof, the landowner shall defray the costs of every such local survey and examination, and the amount thereof shall be a debt due to her Majesty from the landowner, and if not paid upon demand may be recovered as a debt due to the Crown, with the costs of suit, or may be recovered, with costs, as a penalty is or may be recoverable from the landowner.

42. Nothing in this act contained shall authorise any person to purchase, take, use, or interfere with any land, soil, or water, or any right in respect thereof, or to take away, lessen, prejudice, or alter any of the rights, privileges, powers, or authorities, vested in or enjoyed by her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the War Department for the time being, without the previous consent of the same Principal Secretary signified in writing under his hand, which consent the said Principal Secretary for the time being is hereby authorised to give.

43. Nothing in this act contained shall take away, lessen, prejudice, or alter any of the rights, privileges, powers, or authorities vested in or to be discharged by any commissioners of sewers appointed by any commission under the Great Seal or under the seal of the Duchy of Lancaster, or in or by any other lawful commission of sewers, or the commissioners appointed under any local or private acts of Parliament for sewers or drainage; nor shall any work be done which in any way interferes with any sewers, drains, or watercourses, under the control of any commissioners of sewers; and no new sewers, drains, watercourses, or works of drainage, shall be made or done under the powers of this act within the district and jurisdiction of any such commissioners, unless the same be previously approved by those commissioners; and all such works shall be carried on and completed under the direction and control of the same commissioners and their officers; and all sewers, drains, watercourses, and works of drainage made under this act, within the district and jurisdiction of any commissioners of sewers, shall be and remain subject in all respects to the jurisdiction of those commissioners; and whenever any works under this act would intersect or interfere with any sewer, drain, or watercourse, under the control of any such commissioners, the person or company executing the same shall, before any such works be made, construct such proper sewers or works of drainage, and also comply with such orders and regulations, as those commissioners shall require or make to guard against injury to the drainage of the district.

44. All works executed under the authority of this act in, or connected with, the river Thames, or the towing-path thereof, within the jurisdiction of the Conservators of the River Thames, shall, in addition to the approval of such works by the Admiralty, so far as hereinbefore made necessary, be executed according to a plan to be approved of by such conservators, and to be deposited at their office; and such works shall be executed and performed to the satisfaction of the engineer for the time being of such conservators; and nothing herein contained shall extend to prejudice or derogate from the estates, rights, interests, liberties, privileges, or franchises of the Conservators of the River Thames, or to prohibit, defeat, alter, or diminish any power, authority, or jurisdiction which, at the time of the passing of this act, the said conservators did or might lawfully claim, use, or exercise.

45. Where any of the intended works to be done under or by virtue of this act shall or may pass over, under, or by the side of, or so as prejudicially to interfere with, any sewer, drain, watercourse, defence, or work under the jurisdiction or control of the Metropolitan Board of Works, or of any vestry or district board constituted under the Metropolitan Local Management Act, 1855, or any sewers or works to be made or executed by any such board or vestry, or shall or may in any way prejudicially affect the sewerage or drainage of the districts under the control of any such board or vestry, the person or company executing such works shall not commence the same until he or they shall have given to the said metropolitan or district board or vestry, as the case may be, fourteen days previous notice in writing of his or their intention to commence them, by leaving such notice at the principal office of such board or vestry, as the case may be, for the time being, with a plan and section shewing the course and inclination of the intended works, and other necessary particulars relating thereto, and until such board or vestry respectively shall have signified their approval of the same, unless such board or vestry, as the case may be, do not signify their approval, disapproval, or other directions, within fourteen days after service of the said plan, sections, and particulars as aforesaid; and such person or company shall comply with, and conform to, all directions and regulations of the respective board or vestry in the execution of the said works, and shall provide any new, altered, or substituted works, in such manner as such board or vestry may deem necessary for the proper protection of the sewers and works hereinbefore referred to, and for preventing injury or impediment thereto by or by reason of the said intended works, or any part thereof, and shall save harmless the said metropolitan or district board or vestry respectively against all and every expense to be occasioned thereby; and all such works as may be so required shall be done by or under the direction, superintendence, and control of the engineer or other officer or officers of the said metropolitan or district board or vestry, as the case may be, at the costs, charges, and expenses, in all respects, of the landowner; and when any new, altered, or substituted works as aforesaid, or any works of defence connected therewith, shall be completed, under the provisions of this act, the same shall thereafter be as fully and completely under the direction, jurisdiction, and control of the said boards and vestry respectively, as any sewers or works now are, or hereafter may be; and nothing in this act shall extend to prejudice, diminish, alter, or take away any of the rights, powers, or authorities vested or to be vested in the said boards and vestries, or any of them, or their successors; but all such rights, powers, and authorities shall be as valid and effectual as if this act had not been passed.

46. Nothing in this act contained shall authorise any person to take, otherwise than by agreement, any land of any waterworks company or waterworks commissioners, or to alter or interfere with any works or property of any such company or commissioners, without their previous consent in writing, or to authorise any person to foul or otherwise injuriously interfere with or affect any stream or supply of water which any waterworks company or waterworks commissioners are authorised to use for the purposes of their undertaking.

47. All works executed under the authority of this act in or connected with any river, canal, or inland navigation, or the banks or towing-paths or works thereof, vested in or under the jurisdiction or management of any corporation, conservators, trustees, commissioners, undertakers, or individuals, or in respect of the navigation whereon or the use whereof any such corporation, conservators, trustees, commissioners, undertakers, or individuals are entitled by virtue of any act of Parliament to the receipt of any tolls or other dues, shall be executed according to a plan to be approved by such corporation, conservators, trustees, commissioners, undertakers, or individuals, and to be deposited at their office, and such works shall be executed, maintained, and performed to the reasonable satisfaction of the engineer for the time being of such corporation, conservators, trustees, commissioners, undertakers, or individuals; and nothing in this act contained shall prejudice or derogate from the estates, powers, rights, interests, liberties, privileges, or franchises of such corporation, conservators, trustees, commissioners, undertakers, or individuals, or prohibit, defeat, alter, or diminish any right, power, authority, or jurisdiction which, at the time of the passing of this act, such corporation, conservators, trustees, commissioners, undertakers, or individuals did or might lawfully claim, use, or exercise.

48. The commissioners shall, if and as they see occasion, cause any improvements in progress under this act to be inspected by a commissioner or assistant commissioner, or an engineer or surveyor, to ascertain the due execution thereof.

And with regard to charges for improvements under this act, be it enacted, as follows:—

49. When the commissioners are satisfied that the improvements sanctioned by them, or some part thereof, have been properly executed, either according to the specifications and plans or drawings approved of by them, or with such deviations therefrom as in their judgment will not diminish the permanent benefit accruing from such improvements to the lands wherein they have been made, they shall execute a charge under their hands and seal upon the inheritance or fee of the lands comprised in the provisional or other sanctioning order, or some sufficient part thereof, for the sum by the same order expressed to be chargeable in respect of such improvements, if all the said improvements have been completed, or for a proportional part of such sum if a part only of the said improvements have been executed, together, in either case, with the interest by the same order expressed, and with the amount (if any) which shall have been paid in respect of the purchase of adjoining lands, or of any easement, authority, or right in, through, over, or affecting adjoining lands, with interest thereon at the like rate.

50. If the landowner is desirous that the inheritance or fee of the lands improved should be charged with the expenses of and incident to his application to the commissioners, or his contract with any company or person relating to the execution of the improvements, or to the advance of money for their execution, the commissioners may ascertain the amount of the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred preparatory or in relation to and consequent on such contract, and the application to the commissioners or either of them, and may include in the principal money charged on the inheritance or fee of such lands the amount of such costs, charges, and expenses, and of the settled or taxed costs, if any, which a court or judge shall have ordered as aforesaid to be deemed and taken to be part of the expenses of and incident to the application for improvements, or such part thereof as the commissioners think fit; and the commissioners may also include in such principal money interest at a rate not exceeding 5l. per centum per annum on all payments forming part of the same principal money from the respective dates of such payments to that of the absolute order, but so that no interest shall be allowed on any such payment for more than six years; provided that the total amount of the principal money to be charged on the lands improved under the provisions of this act shall not in any case exceed that to which, in the opinion of the commissioners, the inheritance or fee of the lands improved will be durably benefited by the improvements.

51. Every charge under this act shall be created by way of rent-charge, payable half-yearly, extending over the term of years fixed by the provisional or other sanctioning order, and the first payment thereof to be made six months after the time when the works in respect of which the same was granted were executed to the satisfaction of the commissioners; and the payment for each half year shall be, and be expressed to be, as to part thereof a repayment of a certain amount of principal money, and as to the remainder thereof a payment of interest; and the charge shall be duly stamped for denoting payment of the proper ad valorem stamp duty which would be payable on a mortgage for securing the like amount as the principal money thereby charged, and shall be called an absolute order; and a copy of every such absolute order shall be authenticated by the seal of the commissioners, and shall be kept by them; and such copy, and any copy thereof authenticated by their seal, shall be evidence of the contents and purport of the same absolute order.

52. Charges under this act shall be made according to the form in the Schedule (B.) hereto annexed, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit.

53. Whenever, by assignment, under the 26th section hereof or otherwise, a company having power to execute or advance money for the improvement of land shall become entitled to the creation of any charge under either the 49th or the 78th section hereof, the commissioners shall, if required, but subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, create such charge in the form of, and so that it may also operate as, an absolute or other corresponding order under the act or acts applying to such company.

54. Any company authorised by act of Parliament to execute or advance money for the improvement of land, by giving notice to the commissioners of their intention to avail themselves of any of the powers given by this act, shall be held to have adopted the same, and thenceforth all the procedure of such company shall be carried on under and in accordance with this act only; and any such company which shall adopt this act as hereinbefore provided may, with the sanction of three-fourths of the shareholders present at an extraordinary meeting of the company specially convened for the purpose, execute or advance money for the execution of any improvement authorised by this act in any part of the United Kingdom, although not so authorised by any act or acts relating to the company.

55. The execution of the absolute order by the commissioners shall be conclusive evidence in all courts, and for all purposes, of the validity of the charge thereby expressed to be made, and no inquiry shall be permitted either into the title or estate of the landowner, or into the due performance of anything required to be done by this act, or as to any other matter on which the validity of such charge might but for this enactment have depended.

56. A memorial of every absolute order of the commissioners whereby a rent-charge is created on land in England and Wales, in pursuance of this act, shall be registered at the office of the Land Registry in England, and a memorial of every absolute order of the commissioners whereby a rent-charge is created on land in Ireland, in pursuance of this act, shall be entered in the proper office for the registration of deeds and wills, and such memorials respectively shall express and contain the date of the order, the name and address of the landowner, the particulars of the lands charged, the amount of the rent-charge, and the period during which the same shall be made payable; and the production of the absolute order, sealed with the seal of the commissioners, shall be a sufficient authority to the registrar for the entry of such memorial at the proper registry office; and all grants of rent-charges on lands in Scotland shall be registered in the general or particular register of sasines: provided that every rent-charge to which the present clause applies shall have priority as hereinafter declared, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

57. Whenever by or under the provisions of any act of Parliament, Royal Charter, or commission under the Great Seal or the Seal of the Duchy of Lancaster any public or general works of drainage or other improvements shall be required or authorised to be executed, and the cost thereof shall be directed or authorised to be assessed or charged upon the inheritance of the lands improved, then any landowner who shall, under such act, charter, or commission, have been assessed, and shall have become liable to pay any sum of money so chargeable for or towards such works and improvements, or any of them, in respect of his land, may apply to the commissioners to sanction the money so assessed being charged upon the land in respect of which such landowner shall have been so assessed; and if the commissioners shall be satisfied that the works or improvements have been executed in accordance with the requirement or authority in such act, charter, or commission contained, they may, after the money shall have been duly paid by such landowner, by an absolute order within the meaning of the 51st section hereof, charge upon the inheritance or fee of the land in respect of which such landowner shall have been so assessed the amount so assessed and paid, or such part of it as the commissioners may be willing to sanction, to be repaid with interest.

58. Such absolute order and charge may be made in any form and for any term permitted by this act, and all the provisions hereof shall apply thereto in the same manner and with the same effect and operation in all respects as if such order and charge had been made in respect of improvements upon the said land executed under the powers of this act; and if the landowner is desirous that the inheritance or fee of the said land should be charged with the costs, charges, and expenses of and incident to the said application and order, or any contract connected therewith, the provisions of the 50th section hereof shall extend and apply to the present case in the same manner as to the costs, charges, and expenses of the application and contracts in the said 50th section mentioned.

59. From the date of the absolute order, the grantee thereof, and his executors, administrators, successors, and assigns, shall have a charge on the lands therein comprised for the principal money from time to time remaining undischarged, by payment of the rent-charge, with interest, at the rates in the several cases hereinbefore respectively expressed, and such charge shall have priority over every other then existing and future charge and incumbrance affecting such lands or estates and interests respectively, whether created under the powers of any act of Parliament or otherwise, except quit rent, crown rents, chief rents, feu duties, ground annuals, and other charges incident to tenure, tithe commutation rent-charges and tithes, charges created or to be created under any act authorising advances of public money for the improvement of land, and any charges created under this act, or charges of prior date created under any other existing act of Parliament authorising the charging of lands with the expense of, and incident to, their improvement: provided that in case a part only of the land charged is subject to a mortgage or other incumbrance, the charge created under the authority of this act shall have priority over the mortgage or other incumbrance only to the extent of a due proportion of such charge, when and so soon as the same shall be ascertained under and pursuant to the 66th section of this act.

60. Every charge under this act shall, as regards the holder thereof, be deemed to be personal property, except that any holder of such a charge, who shall desire to extinguish the same by reuniting it to the land charged, shall have power for that purpose to direct by any deed that it shall be reunited to, and merge in, the beneficial interest in the said land, as if it were of the same nature and tenure therewith; but all trustees, directors, and other persons who may be directed or authorised to invest any money on real security, shall (unless the contrary be provided by the instrument directing or authorising such investment) have power, at their discretion, to invest money in such charges, or on mortgages thereof.

61. No charge on land made by any absolute order, by virtue of this act, shall be deemed such an incumbrance as shall preclude a trustee of money, with power to invest the same in the purchase of land or on mortgage, from investing it in a purchase or upon a mortgage of the land so charged, unless the terms of his trust or power expressly provide that the land to be so purchased or taken in mortgage be not subject to any prior charge.

62. No proprietor of an entailed estate in Scotland shall be held to have contravened the conditions of the entail, by reason of his having availed himself of the provisions of this act, and no rent-charge imposed or created on any entailed lands in Scotland, under the authority of this act, shall be made use of as a ground for adjudging, selling, or evicting such lands, or any part thereof, contrary to the provisions and conditions of the entail, but every such rent-charge shall be a good and effectual charge upon and against such entailed lands to every other effect, and upon and against the rents and profits thereof.

63. Every rent-charge on land by virtue of this act may be recovered by the person or company for the time being entitled to the same, as to lands in England or Ireland, by the same means, and with the like powers, and in like manner in all respects, as a rent-charge in lieu of tithes would be recoverable if charged on the same land, under the act of the 7 Will. 4, for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales, or under the act of the 1 & 2 Vict., to abolish compositions for tithes in Ireland, and to substitute rent-charges in lieu thereof, and the several acts passed for amending the same, as the case may be, and as if such rent-charge, by virtue of this act, were a rent-charge in lieu of tithes made payable to such person or company under the said acts respectively; and as to lands in Scotland, by the same means, and in the like manner in all respects, as any feu duties or rent or annual rent or other payment out of the same lands would be recoverable.

64. If any rent-charge payable under this act shall be in arrear, such arrear shall not bear interest for a longer period than six months, but interest at 5l. per cent. per annum in respect of the same, for any period not exceeding six months, may be recovered in the same manner as the sum in arrear: provided that if, at the expiration of six months from the time of any payment falling into arrear, there shall not be upon the land charged a sufficient distress to answer and satisfy the said payment, and interest thereon, for the said period of six months, together with the costs and charges of such distress, then the arrears of such payment shall continue to bear interest at the rate of 5l. per cent. per annum until payment or satisfaction thereof, and such interest may be recovered in the same manner as the sum in arrear.

65. The grantee, or other person for the time being entitled to any rent-charge created under this act, may assign the same by deed duly stamped, and wherein the consideration is truly stated; and such assignment may be according to the form in Schedule (C.) to this act annexed, or to the like effect; and all assignments made in such form, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit, shall be effectual to vest, both at law and in equity, the charge thereby assigned, and all the powers, authorities, rights, and remedies of the assignor with reference to such charge, in the assignee, his successors, executors, administrators, and assigns respectively, and notice of such assignment shall be sent to the commissioners at their office in London.

66. Every landowner on whose land a charge shall have been made under this act, and every succeeding tenant for life, tenant in tail, and other person having a limited interest in the land so charged, shall, as between himself and the persons in remainder or reversion, be bound to pay the yearly or other periodical payments of such charge which shall become payable during the continuance of his interest; and in case he be in the actual occupation, or entitled to an apportioned part of the rents and profits of such land up to the time of the termination of his interest, he shall also be bound to pay an apportioned part of the yearly rent, or other periodical payment, of such charge which shall become due next after the termination of his interest, proportional to the time which elapsed between the day for the previous payment and the day of such termination: provided that no person becoming entitled in possession to any estate or interest in the land shall be liable, as between himself and the persons entitled to the rent-charge, to pay any arrears of the charge remaining unpaid at the time of his becoming so entitled in possession beyond the amount of two years' payment of such charge: provided also, that the amount paid by any person in respect of such arrears, and any costs occasioned by non-payment thereof, shall be a debt from the person who in the first instance ought to have paid the same, or from his estate, to the person who paid the same, and shall be recoverable accordingly.

67. If any tenant or occupier at a rent join in the application for an improvement, or by writing under his hand signify to the commissioners, or to an assistant commissioner or engineer, his consent to become charged with the charge, or an apportioned part thereof, as hereinafter mentioned, such tenant or occupier shall, during his tenancy or occupation, be liable to pay the charge, or an apportioned part thereof, as hereinafter mentioned; and in case the charge be made in respect of the improvement, as well of other land as of the land included in such tenancy or occupation, the commissioners may, upon such consent of the tenant or occupier, declare in the absolute order what portion of the whole charge payable in respect of the improvement shall be payable by such tenant or occupier, during his tenancy or occupancy, in respect of the probable improvement of the land included in his tenancy or occupation; but, except as aforesaid, every tenant or occupier who pays such charge shall be entitled to deduct the amount thereof from the rent payable by him to the landowner, and shall be allowed the same in account with him.

68. If at any time land charged under this act, or under any other act authorising the creation of charges by the commissioners, is occupied in separate farms or other holdings, or has become the property of separate owners, or the owner thereof is entitled thereto under separate titles, or for distinct and separate interests, or is desirous to sell or dispose of part of such land, or part only of such land is subject to any mortgage or other incumbrance, or for any other reason it would be desirable that the charge should be apportioned, or a part of the land charged released therefrom, the commissioners may, with the consent of the landowner, or if the land has become the property of separate owners, or a part thereof is subject to any mortgage or incumbrance, then upon the application of any one of such owners, or of such mortgagee or incumbrancer, but in every case with due notice to the grantee or assignee of the charge, or the husband, guardian, tutor, curator, committee, or trustee of such grantee or assignee, if a married woman, infant, lunatic, idiot, or furious or fatuous person, and to such other parties (if any) as the commissioners think right, either release from such charge any part of the land charged therewith, or apportion such charge, so that a separate and distinct charge may become charged on each separate farm or holding, or on the land of each landowner, or on the land held under each separate title, or for each distinct and separate interest, or on the part or each part which the landowner is desirous to sell or dispose of, and the part intended to be retained by him, or on the part subject to such mortgage or other incumbrance, and on the residue, or on any other separate parts of the land, but so that no charge charged under such apportionment shall be less than 20s. for each half-yearly payment: provided that no lands shall, in consequence of any such apportionment or release, become charged with any greater amount than that to which, in the opinion of the commissioners, they have been durably benefited by the improvements in respect of which such charge was created.

60. Every such apportionment or release shall be made by an order under the hands and seal of the commissioners, and shall be in the form set out in Schedule (D.) or (E.) to this act, as the case may be, or as near thereto as circumstances will permit, and as to lands in England and Wales, or in Ireland or Scotland, shall be registered in the manner mentioned in the 54th section hereof, or as near thereto as circumstances will permit; and a copy of every such order shall be authenticated by the seal of the commissioners, and shall be kept by them; and such copy, or any copy thereof authenticated by their seal, shall be conclusive evidence in all courts and for all purposes of the contents and purport of the same order, and of the validity of the apportionment or release thereby expressed to be made; and such order shall take effect from the date thereof, subject to the continuance of all rights and remedies for the recovery of moneys which before the date thereof may have become payable out of any lands under the charge so apportioned or released.

70. Every charge apportioned or released as aforesaid shall be recoverable out of the lands on which the same is charged by the order of apportionment, or which shall not by the order of release be released therefrom, in the same manner as if the same had been originally charged on such lands respectively, and shall, for all the purposes of this act, or of the act under which the original charge was created, be deemed to be an original charge on such lands by absolute order.

71. Where any lands are charged by more than one absolute order, any order of apportionment or release under the preceding sections hereof may comprise all or any number of the rent-charges existing by virtue of such absolute orders.

And with regard to the upholding improvements under this act, be it enacted as follows:—

72. So long as any land shall continue charged with any charge hereunder, the person for the time being bound to make the periodical payments of such charge shall uphold the improvements and works in respect of which such charge is made, and shall keep clear and open the outfalls and watercourses of all the drains (if any), and shall, if required either by the commissioners or by any person who shall for the time being be interested in such charge under any assignment or mortgage thereof, once in every year certify to the commissioners the state of such improvements and works, and of such outfalls and watercourses (if any); and if such person shall not so keep and uphold such improvements and works, and such outfalls and watercourses (if any), or shall fell, or cause or knowingly permit to be felled, except in proper thinning, any trees planted under the authority of this act as an improvement, he shall be liable to an action on the case, in the nature of an action of waste, for the damage thereby occasioned, at the suit of any person entitled to any estate in remainder or reversion in such lands.

73. Every person for the time being bound to make the periodical payments of any charge may from time to time, by himself, his engineers, surveyors, agents, servants, and workmen, enter upon any lands in, through, or upon which any of the works have been executed, to ascertain the condition of the works, and to maintain and repair the same, nevertheless paying to the person for the time being enabled by this act to sell or grant any easement in such lands, in case the parties differ about the same, such compensation as shall be determined by two justices or the sheriff, as provided by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, for settlement by justices and sheriffs respectively of questions of disputed compensation: provided that as to any lands adjoining or near the land improved, to which the provisions of the acts of the 10 & 11 Vict. cc. 38 and 118, and those of the third part of the Land Drainage Act, 1861, are heretofore respectively made applicable, the powers of entry upon such lands for any of the purposes aforesaid shall be subject to and be regulated by the provisions of those acts respectively.

74. When any farm-houses, farm-buildings, or works susceptible of damage by fire shall have been erected, improved, or added to under this act, then, so long as any land shall continue charged under this act in respect thereof, the person for the time being bound to make the yearly or other periodical payments of such charge shall insure and keep insured against damage by fire all such farm-houses, farm-buildings, and works in an amount equal to the principal amount originally secured by such charge at the least; and such person shall once in every year certify to the commissioners the fact of such insurance, and the particulars thereof, and that the premium and duty for such insurance for the year then current have been duly paid; and if such person shall not insure or keep insured such farm-houses, farm-buildings, and works, or shall not duly certify the matters aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the person entitled to the charge for the time being, with the assent of the commissioners, to insure against damage by fire the said farm-houses, farm-buildings, and works in an amount not exceeding the principal amount originally secured by such charge, and either in the name of the person by whom such default shall have been made, or in the name of the landowner mentioned in the absolute order, and thereafter to keep the same insured during the continuance of the said charge; and the person for the time being bound to make the periodical payments of such charge shall from time to time, on the day on which the next payment shall become due on the said charge, repay to the person for the time being entitled to the said charge any sums so paid by him for premium and duty on such insurance; and in default of such payment, the amount of such premium and duty, with interest thereon at the rate of 5l. per centum per annum from the time of such default, may be recovered by the last-mentioned person by the same means and in the like manner as if the same had been payable as part of the said charge.

75. If it shall be represented to the commissioners that the person for the time being bound to make periodical payments of any charge created under this or any other existing act authorising the advance of money for the improvement of land has neglected to uphold and maintain the improvements in respect of which the charge was executed, or any of them, the commissioners may, upon security being given for such an amount as they may consider necessary to cover any expenses that may be incurred by them, cause an inspection of the works to be made by an assistant commissioner, engineer, or surveyor.

After such inspection, if the commissioners are satisfied that the improvements have not been upheld and maintained, they shall cause notice to be given to the person bound to make the said periodical payments requiring him to execute the works necessary to uphold and maintain the same within three calendar months from the time of giving such notice.

If such works shall not be executed to the satisfaction of the commissioners within such three months, they may cause such works as in their judgment shall be necessary to uphold and maintain such improvements to be executed by a person appointed by them.

The costs thereof, including the expenses of the assistant commissioner, engineer, or surveyor, shall be repaid by the person bound to make the said periodical payments to the person entitled to the charge, on request, and in default thereof the amount so certified may be recovered, with all expenses incidental to the recovery thereof, in the name of the person for the time being entitled to the charge, by the same means and in the like manner as if the same had been payable as part of the said charge.

76. If it shall be represented to the commissioners that it is not expedient or necessary that any works for the cost of which there shall be a subsisting charge, or any part of such works, should be upheld or maintained, the commissioners may, on having deposited with them a sum, to be fixed by them, to cover all expenses, cause the said works to be inspected by an assistant commissioner, engineer, or surveyor.

If after such inspection and notice to the parties who were served with notice of the application to charge the land or their representatives, and such other persons, if any, as the commissioners may direct, the commissioners shall find and certify that it is not expedient or necessary that the works, or any of them, should be upheld or maintained, thereupon the person for the time being bound to make the said periodical payment shall be relieved from all liability in respect of the maintenance of the works referred to in the commissioners' certificate.

77. If any embankment or work constructed under the powers of this act, under, over, through, or across any tidal water or navigable river, or if any portion of any embankment or work which affects or may affect any such water or river, or the access thereto, shall be abandoned, or suffered to fall into disuse or decay, it shall be lawful for the Admiralty or the Board of Trade, as the case may require, to abate and remove the same, or such part or parts thereof as he or they may at any time or times deem fit and proper, to restore the site thereof to its former condition, at the cost and charge of the landowner, the amount of which cost and charge shall be a debt due from the landowner to the Crown, and be recovered accordingly, with costs of suit.

And with regard to charging lands with money subscribed for the construction of railways, be it enacted, as follows:—

78. In case any landowner shall be desirous of subscribing for any shares or stock in the capital, whether original or additional, of a company having power to construct a railway or navigable canal, or any branch or extension railway or navigable canal, or any deviation of a line of railway or a navigable canal already sanctioned, the works for which such subscription is to be made being unfinished, or in any additional capital to be raised for the completion of any such railway, canal, branch, extension, or deviation, the same being upon or near to and which will improve or benefit the lands of such landowner, and who shall be desirous that such amount, or any part thereof, may be charged upon the lands so to be improved, it shall be lawful for him to apply to the commissioners for that purpose within the time limited by the railway or canal company's act or acts for the construction of the works in question.

79. If the commissioners shall think fit to entertain such application, they shall cause all such inquiries to be made, and take all such other steps, as shall seem to them expedient for obtaining information as to the circumstances; and all the provisions of the 13th, 14th, 15th, 17th, 18th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 25th, and 51st sections of this act shall apply to the case as though an improvement were to be made of the lands proposed to be charged.

80. If the commissioners shall be satisfied that the railway or canal, when constructed and open for traffic, will effect a permanent increase of the yearly value of the lands exceeding the yearly amount proposed to be charged thereon, they shall execute and deliver to the landowner a provisional order, under their seal and the hands of two of them, expressing their sanction of the charge proposed; and such order shall be made as near to the form set forth in the Schedule (A.) to this act as the circumstances will permit, and shall, with the right to a charge thereby created, be assignable by indorsement, either absolutely or by way of security, to any company or person that may agree to advance, by paying the same to the railway or canal company, the amount authorised to be charged, and notice of such assignment shall be given to the commissioners, and shall be registered by them.

81. Every company empowered by act of Parliament to lend money for the improvement of land is hereby empowered to advance, by paying the same to the railway or canal company, any money authorised to be charged in manner aforesaid.

82. When the railway or canal shall have been completed and opened throughout for public traffic, and as many shares in the capital of the railway or canal company subscribed for or held as aforesaid by the landowner as shall be equal in nominal amount to the money authorised to be charged shall have been fully paid up, and the certificates for such shares shall have been deposited by the landowner with the commissioners, the commissioners shall, by an absolute order under their hands and seal, execute to the landowner or his assignees a charge upon the inheritance or fee of the lands in question of the amount authorised as aforesaid to be charged, and may, if the landowner shall so desire, include, with the principal money so charged, the costs, charges, and expenses of the application and orders, and of any advance which may have been made to him of the amount authorised to be charged, and such settled or taxed costs and interest as mentioned in the 50th section hereof, subject nevertheless to the proviso in the same section contained.

83. Such absolute order shall be made in the form in the Schedule (B.) to this act annexed, or as near thereto as the circumstances will permit, and all the provisions of this act relating to absolute orders, whether in respect of the form or effect of such charges or orders or otherwise, except only the provisions for the apportionment and release of such charges, shall apply to absolute orders under the last preceding section as far as the circumstances admit.

84. The landowner shall forthwith give notice to the railway or canal company of the execution of such absolute order, and of the deposit of such certificates with the commissioners, and thereupon the company shall make an entry or memorial in their register of shareholders with respect to such shares of the fact of such absolute order having been executed.

85. From the time of such notice, and during the whole term of the charge created by such absolute order, the person who for the time being shall be bound to make the periodical payments of such charge shall be entitled to the said shares, and if the same shall not at the time being be registered in his name, the person registered as the holder thereof shall, as between himself and the person so entitled, hold them in trust for such last-mentioned person.

86. The person so for the time being entitled may at any time require the person registered as the holder of the said shares, or his representatives, to transfer to him the said shares, and such transfer shall thereupon be made accordingly, but at the expense in all respects of the transferee; and upon the production of such transfer duly stamped, and of a certificate by the commissioners under their hands and seal that the transferee is the person at the time being bound to make the periodical payments of the said charge, the railway or canal company shall register such transfer.

87. With the exception of such transfers as may from time to time be made for the purpose of transferring the shares to the person so for the time being entitled thereto, the said shares shall not under any circumstances be transferred or disposed of by the registered holder, whether he be the person for the time being entitled thereto or not, during the term of the said charge; but during the term of such charge the registered holder for the time being of the said shares shall have all the other rights and powers of a shareholder in the railway or canal company in respect of the said shares; and the railway or canal company shall not be bound to see to the application of any dividend received by such registered holder, but as between himself and the person or persons for the time being entitled to such shares, he shall hold any dividend which may be received by him in trust for the person who, at the time when such dividend became payable, was the person entitled to the said shares.

88. Whenever any person, or those whom he legally represents as their executor or administrator, shall have been bound to make, and shall have made, such and so many periodical payments of the charge as to repay thereby principal money which, in proportion to the whole amount of principal money charged, and the whole number of the said shares, shall correspond to any integral number of shares, with or without a fraction over, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, on the application of such person, made either during the term of the charge, or within two years after its expiration, to certify that fact under their hands and seal, and by the same certificate to appropriate to such person certain specified shares to such integral number, and to deliver to him the corresponding share certificates; and upon the production to the railway or canal company of such certificate by the commissioners and share certificates, it shall be lawful for such person, if he shall not already be the registered holder, to require such shares to be transferred to him, and the railway or canal company shall make an entry or memorial on their register of shareholders of such shares being freed from the provisions of this act, or of the term of the charge having expired, as the case may be; and such shares shall thenceforward be held and transferred in the same manner as any other shares in the same company, but if the term of the charge shall not have expired, the three last preceding sections of this act shall still apply to the residue of the shares to which the same charge shall relate.

89. The shares composing the said residue shall, at the end of two years after the expiration of the term of the charge, belong to the person who shall have been bound to make the last periodical payment of the charge, or to his executors or administrators, on such payment being made; and the commissioners shall deliver to him or them the corresponding share certificates, and certify the title to the shares under their hands and seal, in accordance with the above provision; and upon the production to the railway or canal company of the share certificates and such certificate by the commissioners, such person as aforesaid, or his executors or administrators, shall have the said shares transferred to him or them, so far as he or they shall not be already the registered holder or holders thereof; and the railway or canal company shall make an entry or memorial on their register of shareholders of the term of the charge having expired, and thenceforward the said shares shall be held and transferred in the same manner as any other shares in the same company.

90. And whereas it is expedient, that a table or tables of fees proper to be taken by the Inclosure Commissioners, in respect of documents issuing out of their office by virtue of the provisions of this act, should be prepared: be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the said Inclosure Commissioners to prepare, or cause to be prepared, a table or tables of fees, specifying what fees are proper to be demanded and taken in the office of the said Inclosure Commissioners in respect of any forms, orders, or documents prepared in or issued from such office, by virtue of the provisions of this act; and such table or tables shall be laid before the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, who shall have power to revise and settle the same, and from time to time to alter or amend the same, as they may deem necessary and proper, and the said table or tables of fees, so revised, settled, altered, or amended, from time to time to approve and allow; and the said Inclosure Commissioners are required, so soon and as often as each table or tables of fees shall have been approved and allowed, to cause the same to be inserted and published in the London Gazette; and from and after such publication, such fees may be legally demanded, and may be received and recovered, by any person appointed by the said Inclosure Commissioners to receive or recover the same.

91. The said Inclosure Commissioners shall cause the fees received by them, under the authority of this act, to be duly and regularly entered in one or more books to be kept for that purpose, distinguishing the fees received under their several heads, and shall render a true and faithful account thereof to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury at such times, and in such form of account, and with such particulars of receipt or otherwise, and accompanied by such vouchers, as the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall from time to time require; and the said Inclosure Commissioners shall from time to time, when required so to do by the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, cause the amount of such fees to be paid into the receipt of the Exchequer, to the credit of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

CAP. CXV.

An Act to prohibit the placing of poisoned Flesh and poisonous Matters in Plantations, Fields, and open Places, and to extend the Poisoned Grain Prohibition Act, 1863.

[29th July, 1864.]

Sec. 1. Short title.

2. Penalty for placing poisoned flesh in fields, &c.

3. Not to apply to occupier placing poisoned preparations for destruction of vermin.

4. As to application of act.

Whereas it is expedient to extend the provisions of an act passed in the session of Parliament held in the 26 & 27 Vict., intituled "An Act to prohibit the Sale and Use of Poisoned Grain or Seed:" be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sec. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Poisoned Flesh Prohibition Act, 1864."

2. Every person who shall knowingly and wilfully set, lay, put, or place, or cause to be set, laid, put, or placed, in or upon any land any flesh or meat which has been mixed with, or steeped in or impregnated with, poison or any poisonous ingredient so as to render such flesh or meat poisonous and calculated to destroy life, shall, upon a summary conviction thereof, forfeit any sum not exceeding 10*l.*, to be recovered in the manner provided by the Poisoned Grain Prohibition Act, 1863: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent owners or occupiers of land in Ireland from laying or causing to be laid any poisonous matter as herein-before described, after a notice has been posted in a conspicuous place, and notice in writing has been given to the nearest constabulary station.

3. Nothing in this act shall make it unlawful for the occupier of any dwelling-house or other building, or the owner of any rick or stack of wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, tares, seeds, or of any cultivated vegetable produce, to put or place, or cause to be put or placed, in any such dwelling-house or other building, or in any inclosed garden attached to such dwelling-house, or in the drains connected with any such dwelling-house, provided that such drains are so protected with gratings or otherwise as to prevent any dog from entering the same, or within such rick or stack, any poison or poisonous ingredient or preparation for the destruction of rats, mice, or other small vermin.

4. This act shall not apply to any grain, seed, or meal within the provisions of the Poisoned Grain Prohibition Act, 1863, and the provisions of the 5th section of the said Poisoned Grain Prohibition Act, 1863, shall apply to any proceedings instituted under this act, and shall come into operation on the 1st October, 1864.

CAP. CXVI.

An Act to make Provision for distributing the Charge of Relief of certain Classes of poor Persons over the whole of the Metropolis. [29th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. After the 29th September, the guardians of parishes or unions in the metropolis may keep account of relief to certain poor, and obtain reimbursement of the amount from the Metropolitan Board of Works.

2. The Metropolitan Board of Works shall reimburse the guardians out of their general rate.

3. What relief to be reimbursed.

4. Provision for the case where vagrant wards established.

5. Guardians to provide proper casual wards.

6. Not to apply to expenditure for relief after Lady-day, 1865.

7. Interpretation of words.

8. Short title.

Whereas it is expedient that provision should be made for distributing the charge of the relief of certain poor persons in the metropolis during the ensuing winter otherwise than is now lawful: be it therefore enacted &c.

Sect. 1. That after the 29th September next, the guardians of every union or parish situated wholly or partly within the district to which the Metropolis Local Management Act applied may, subject to the orders and regulations of the Poor-law Board, make out a separate account of the money expended by them daily in the relief of destitute wayfarers, wanderers, or foundlings, during the hours from eight o'clock at night until eight o'clock in the morning, and submit the same to the auditor appointed to audit their accounts at the usual times of audit, who shall duly examine the same, and shall certify the amount which he shall find to have been legally expended in and about such relief under his hand; and if the Poor-law Board shall have certified, that proper wards or places of reception have been provided by such guardians, the said guardians may thereupon make application in writing to the Metropolitan Board of Works for reimbursement of the amount so certified by the auditor.

2. The said Metropolitan Board of Works shall forthwith pay the amount so certified to the guardians making the application, out of the funds in their possession, from time to time raised under the provisions of the said Metropolis Local Management Act, and the amount so paid shall be deemed to be part of the expenses for which the said board are empowered to make assessments under the said act, and the said guardians shall apply the sum received in aid of the poor rate of their parish or the common fund of their union, as the case may be, and shall account for the same accordingly.

3. The relief to which this act shall apply shall include food and articles of necessity supplied by the said guardians, or by their relieving or other officer, or by any metropolitan police constable authorised by them in such behalf, and also the cost of lodging or shelter hired or temporarily provided for any such poor person, but not money given to him.

4. Where the guardians shall have provided proper wards or other places of reception for this class of poor, and the same shall have been approved of by the Poor-law Board, they may include, as part of the expense incurred by them in the relief of these poor persons, such sum in respect of each pauper as the Poor-law Board shall from time to time allow for the cost and expense of temporarily providing and maintaining such wards or other places.

5. Where no adequate accommodation exists, the guardians shall provide, within their respective unions or parishes, such wards or other places of reception for destitute wayfarers and foundlings as the Poor-law Board, having regard to the number of persons likely to require relief therein respectively, shall direct. In default of making such provision, and until the same has been made, the guardians of the union or parish so making default shall not be entitled to the benefit of this act.

6. The provisions of this act shall not apply to any expenditure for relief incurred after the half-year which will expire at Lady-day, 1865.

7. The several words used in this act shall be construed as in the act of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, and the subsequent acts explaining and extending the same, and the provisions thereof not inconsistent with anything herein contained shall be incorporated herewith.

8. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Metropolitan Houseless Poor Act, 1864."

CAP. CXVII.

An Act to render permissive the Use of the Metric System of Weights and Measures. [29th July, 1864.]

Sect. 1. Short title.

2. Contracts may be made in terms of the metric system.

3. Equivalents of metric weights and measures in terms of weights and measures.

Whereas, for the promotion and extension of our internal as well as our foreign trade, and for the advancement of science, it is expedient to legalise the use of the metric system of weights and measures: be it enacted &c., as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act may be cited as "The Metric Weights and Measures Act, 1864."

2. Notwithstanding anything contained in any act of Parliament to the contrary, no contract or dealing shall be deemed to be invalid, or open to objection, on the ground that the weights or measures expressed or referred to in such contract or dealing are weights or measures of the metric system, or on the ground that decimal subdivisions of legal weights and measures, whether metric or otherwise, are used in such contract or dealing.

3. The table in the schedule hereto annexed shall be deemed to set forth, in terms of the weights and measures in force in this country, the equivalents of the weights and measures therein expressed in terms of the metric system, and such table may be lawfully used for computing, determining, and expressing, in weights and measures, weights and measures of the metric system.

36. Annual report to Parliament by Board of Trade.

Whereas it is expedient that in certain cases railway companies be enabled to obtain further powers on complying with the conditions of a general act of Parliament, without being obliged to procure in each case a special act: be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited as "The Railway Companies Powers Act, 1864."

2. In this act—

The term "railway" includes works connected with or for the purposes of a railway, and also a railway authorised to be but not actually constructed:

The term "railway bill" means a bill pending in or intended to be introduced into either House of Parliament, having for its object or one of its objects to authorise the making of a railway:

The term "the Companies Clauses Acts" means, so far as the enactment in which that term is used relates to England or Ireland, or to a certificate to be operative in England or Ireland, the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845; and, so far as the same relates to Scotland, or to a certificate to be operative in Scotland, the Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845; together with in each case the Companies Clauses Act, 1863:

The term "the Board of Trade" means the Lords of the Committee for the time being of her Majesty's Privy Council appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and foreign plantations.

Description of Cases within this Act.

3. This act shall take effect and apply in each of the cases following; namely,

I.—Where a railway company are desirous that authority should be given to themselves and some other railway company or companies to enter into an agreement with respect to all or any of the matters following; namely,

The maintenance and management of the railways of the companies respectively, or of any one or more of them, or of any part thereof respectively;

The use and working of the railways or railway, or of any part thereof, and the conveyance of traffic thereon;

The fixing, collecting, and apportionment of the tolls, rates, charges, receipts, and revenues levied, taken, or arising in respect of traffic;

The joint ownership, maintenance, management, and use of a station or other work; or the separate ownership, maintenance, management, and use of several parts of a station or other work;

II.—Where a railway company are desirous of obtaining an extension of the time limited for the sale by them of superfluous lands:

III.—Where a railway company incorporated by special act or by certificate under the Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864, are desirous of obtaining authority to raise additional capital.

Application for Certificate.

4. In any such case the company, if desirous to obtain a certificate under this act, shall proceed as follows; namely,

(1). They shall apply to the Board of Trade for a certificate under this act:

(2). They shall lodge at the office of the Board of Trade a draft of the certificate as proposed by them:

(3). They shall publish notice of the application according to the general rules under this act.

5. As soon as conveniently may be after the time for completion of the required notice, the Board of Trade shall proceed to inquire whether the company have complied with the requirements of the general rules respecting notice.

6. The Board of Trade, before settling a draft of a certificate, shall take into consideration any representation made to them, and shall duly inquire into the merits of any objection brought before them, respecting the application.

Opposition of Railway or Canal Company to Application.

7. If in any case any railway or canal company desire to be heard by counsel, agents, and witnesses, against the application of the promoters, and (within such time as is prescribed by general rules under this act) lodge at the office of the Board of Trade a notice in writing to that effect (hereinafter referred to as a notice of opposition) in the form set forth in the schedule to this act (with such variations as circumstances require), in that case the Board of Trade, if the railway or canal company lodging the notice would be affected in any way by the proposed certificate, shall not proceed on the application of the promoters.

8. Where the Board of Trade do not proceed on the application, they shall, not later in any year than the 15th February, if Parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within seven days after the next meeting of Parliament, lay before both Houses of Parliament a copy of the draft certificate lodged by the promoters and of the notice of opposition; and the promoters shall be at liberty to seek, by way of bill, in the same session, in such manner, and on such conditions, as the Houses of Parliament respectively, by Standing Order or otherwise, from time to time direct, such powers as were sought by them by way of certificate.

Settlement of Draft Certificate.

9. Where the Board of Trade proceed on the application, then, on being satisfied that the company have complied with the requirements of the general rules respecting notice, they may, if they think fit, settle a draft of a certificate, certifying to the effect following; namely,

In the first-mentioned case, that the companies in the certificate specified are authorised to agree among themselves with respect to all or any of the matters aforesaid in the certificate specified;

In the secondly-mentioned case, that the time limited for the sale by the company of the superfluous lands is extended as in the certificate specified:

In the thirdly-mentioned case, that the company are authorised to raise, as capital, for the purposes of the certificate, such additional sum of money as therein limited, by the issue of new shares or new stock, either ordinary or preference, or partly ordinary and partly preference, or partly in that mode and partly by borrowing on mortgage, at the option of the company, or as may be prescribed in the certificate, and with power to create and issue debenture stock.

10. The Board of Trade may (subject to the provisions of this act, and having regard to the provisions of any special act relating to any company empowered by a certificate), insert in the certificate such provisions as they, according to the circumstances of the case, deem necessary or proper for better effectuating the purposes of the certificate, and the same shall be deemed to all intents part of the certificate.

11. The certificate may be in the form set forth in the schedule to this act, with such provisions as aforesaid.

Submission of Draft Certificate to Houses of Parliament.

12. The Board of Trade shall lay the draft certificate settled by them before both Houses of Parliament within seven days after the same is settled, if Parliament is then sitting; or if not, then within seven days after the next meeting of Parliament, but not later in any year than the 1st June.

13. On the draft certificate being settled, the promoters shall give notice thereof, according to general rules under this act.

14. If either House of Parliament, within six weeks after the draft of a certificate settled by the Board of Trade is laid before that House, resolves that the certificate ought not to be made, the same shall not be further proceeded with.

Issue and Publication of Certificate.

15. If neither House of Parliament, within the period aforesaid, thinks fit to resolve that the certificate ought not to be made, then, as soon as the period of six weeks after the laying of the draft certificate before both Houses of Parliament has expired, the Board of Trade may make and issue a certificate in conformity with such draft.

16. The certificate shall be published as follows; namely, Where one company only is thereby empowered, then in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, according as the head office of the company is situate in England, Scotland, or Ireland:

Where two or more companies are thereby empowered, then in one or more of the Gazettes, according as the several head offices of the companies respectively are situate in England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively.

Effect of Certificate.

17. As from the time (not being prior to such publication) in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed then as from the time of such publication, the certificate shall have the same force and operation, and shall be as absolutely valid and conclusive to all intents, as if the contents thereof (taken in conjunction with this act) had been expressly enacted by Parliament; and the validity of the certificate shall not be impeached on account of any alleged informality in any court or elsewhere.

18. The certificate shall be judicially noticed without being specially pleaded.

19. Terms used in the certificate shall have the same meanings as they have when used in this act.

20. There shall be incorporated with the certificate (which shall for this purpose be deemed the special act)—

In the first-mentioned case, Part III of the Railways Clauses Act, 1863;

In the thirdly-mentioned case, the Companies Clauses Acts.

21. In the first-mentioned case, during the continuance of any agreement for the joint working of any two railways, in the calculation of tolls and charges for short distances in respect of traffic conveyed on both railways, the distances traversed shall be reckoned continuously on such railways as if they were one railway.

22. It shall not be lawful for any company empowered by a certificate under this act to issue any share created under the authority of the certificate, nor shall any such share vest in the person accepting the same, unless and until a sum not being less than one-fifth part of the amount of such share is paid up in respect thereof.

23. In the thirdly-mentioned case the company, whether incorporated by special act or by certificate, shall be subject to the following restrictions; namely,

- (1). They shall not exercise any power of borrowing money under the certificate until the whole of the share capital authorised by the certificate is subscribed for or taken, and until one-half thereof is actually paid up, and until they prove to the justice who is to certify under sect. 40 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or (in Scotland) to the sheriff who is to certify under sect. 42 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, as the case may be, before he so certifies, that shares for the whole of the capital are issued and accepted, and that not less than one-fifth part of the amount of each separate share has been paid up on account thereof before or at the time of the issue or acceptance thereof, and that all such shares are taken in good faith, and are held by the subscribers or their assigns, those subscribers or their assigns being legally liable for the same (of which matters the certificate of the justice or sheriff shall be sufficient evidence):
- (2). They shall not borrow a larger sum in the whole than one-third of the amount of the share capital authorised by the certificate:
- (3). They shall not, out of money raised under the certificate by calls or borrowing, pay interest or dividend to a shareholder on the amount of calls made on his shares, whether created under the certificate or otherwise (but this provision shall not prevent them paying to a shareholder under the certificate such interest on money advanced by him beyond the amount of calls actually made as is allowed by the Companies Clauses Act):
- (4). They shall not, out of money so raised, pay or deposit any money that may be required to be paid or deposited in relation to any application to Parliament or the Board of Trade:
- (5). They shall apply every part of the money so raised only for the purposes for which it is by the certificate authorised to be applied.

Miscellaneous.

24. Nothing in this act shall make it obligatory on the Board of Trade to settle a draft of a certificate in any case if it appears to the Board of Trade for any reason that the application for a certificate should not be complied with.

25. Nothing in the certificate shall exempt any railway to which it relates, or the company to whom that railway belongs, from the provisions of any general act of Parliament relating to railways, or to the better audit of the accounts of railway companies, passed before or after the issuing of the certificate, or from any revision and alteration, under the authority of Parliament, of the maximum tolls and charges allowed to be taken in respect of that railway.

26. A certificate may be made under this act and the Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864, jointly, and in any case the forms of certificate given in this act and the said act may be adapted to the circumstances of the case.

27. Where, in case the company were proceeding by a railway bill, instead of under this act, the approval of the bill in any manner by the members of the company would be required under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament for the time being in force, the Board of Trade shall not issue a certificate without being satisfied that the members of the company have in like manner approved of the application to the Board of Trade.

28. Subject and according to the restrictions and provisions of this act, the Board of Trade, on the application of the company, may from time to time amend, extend, or vary by certificate, any certificate issued under this act, and may by certificate revoke a previous certificate issued under this act.

29. If in any case it is made to appear to the Board of Trade that any error has been committed in a certificate, or in relation thereto, the Board of Trade may, subject and according to the restrictions and provisions of this act, on the application of the company, body, or person affected by the error, and on notice to the company or companies empowered by the certificate, correct the error by a further certificate.

30. A copy of the London, or Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, containing a certificate, or a copy of a certificate, purporting to be printed by the printers of the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, shall be conclusive evidence of the certificate, and of the due publication thereof, without any proof of the Gazette, or without any proof of the copy, having been in fact so printed, as the case may be.

31. Every company empowered by a certificate shall at all times keep at their head office copies of the certificate printed by the printers of the Gazette, or one of the Gazettes, in which the same was published in such form as general rules direct, to be sold to all persons desiring to buy the same, at a price not exceeding 1s. for each copy.

If any company fail to comply with this provision, they shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20l., and to a further penalty, not exceeding 5l. for every day during which such failure continues after the first penalty is incurred.

32. The provisions of this act relative to the first-mentioned case and to the secondly-mentioned case respectively shall extend and apply, mutatis mutandis, to the proprietors of a railway although not incorporated as a company.

33. Penalties under this act, or under a certificate, the recovery and application whereof are not otherwise provided for, shall be recovered and applied as penalties under the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, as the case may require, are recoverable and applicable.

34. The act of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 83, "to compel clerks of the peace and other persons to take the custody of such documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament," shall apply to documents required to be deposited by general rules under this act.

35. The general rules under this act shall, in the first instance, be those set forth in the schedule to this act; and the Board of Trade may from time to time, for the better execution of this act, make general rules adding to, altering, or revoking any general rules for the time being in force under this act; but any general rules so made by the Board of Trade shall not have effect unless, and until, they are laid before both Houses of Parliament; and if either House of Parliament, within six weeks after the same are laid before that House, thinks fit to resolve that the same, or any part thereof, ought not to take effect, the same, or that part thereof, (as the case may be), shall not take effect; otherwise all rules made by the Board of Trade, under the present section, shall be of the same force and effect as if they had been comprised in the schedule to this act.

All general rules which are to take effect under the present section shall be published in the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Gazettes.

36. Not later than the 1st July in each year the Board of Trade shall lay before both Houses of Parliament a report respecting the applications to, and proceedings of, the Board of Trade under this act during the year then last past.

[Here are to follow the provisions of the certificate showing the powers conferred and the terms and conditions (if any) imposed.]

(Signed) C. D.,
Secretary to the Board of Trade.

The Board of Trade, Whitehall.

Dated this — day of —.

(iii).—General Rules.

Form of Application.

1. The application to the Board of Trade for a certificate is to be made by a memorial in writing under the common seal of the company, lodged at the office of the Board of Trade.

2. Together with the memorial the company are to lodge a printed draft of the certificate as proposed by the company.

Advertisements as to Application.

3. Notice of the application to the Board of Trade is to be given by advertisement published as follows; namely,

In every case, once in each of three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper of the county, city, or town, or county of a city or town, wherein the head office of the promoters is situate:

In the case referred to in the foregoing act as the first-mentioned case, once in each of three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper of each county, city, or town, or county of a city or town, wherein the head office of any railway company with whom the promoters propose to enter into an agreement is situate:

If in any case there is not any such newspaper as hereinbefore described, then in like manner in a newspaper of some adjoining or neighbouring county:

In every case where one company only is proposed to be empowered, then in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, according as the head office of the company is situate in England, Scotland, or Ireland:

In every case where two or more companies are proposed to be empowered, then in one or more of the Gazettes, according as the several head offices of the company respectively are situate in England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively.

4. The advertisements are to be published either in the month of June or in the month of November, and not at any other time.

5. Each advertisement is to give the address of an office in London, where copies of the draft certificate will be supplied as hereinafter directed.

6. Each advertisement is to state that all persons desirous of making to the Board of Trade any representation, or of bringing before them any objection, respecting the application, may do so by letter addressed to the Secretary of the Board of Trade on or before the 1st August or the 1st January next succeeding the date of the advertisement, according as the same is published in the month of June or in the month of November.

7. Within one week after the publication of the latest advertisement a copy of each of the newspapers and Gazettes containing the several advertisements is to be lodged at the office of the Board of Trade.

Notice to Landowners.

8. In the case referred to in the foregoing act as the secondly-mentioned case, the promoters, in the month of June or in the month of November (as the case may be) in which the advertisements are published, are to serve notice of the application on the owners of lands adjoining to the lands to which the application relates.

Notice of Opposition.

9. Notice of opposition by a railway or canal company is to be lodged at the office of the Board of Trade, not later than the 1st August or the 1st January next succeeding the date of the advertisement of application, according as the same is published in the month of June or in the month of November.

Notice of Settlement of Draft Certificate.

10. On the draft certificate being settled by the Board of Trade, the promoters are to serve a copy thereof, with a notice that the draft has been settled by the Board of Trade, on every company, body, or person by whom any representation or objection respecting the application was made to or brought before the Board of Trade, and are also to give, by advertisement or otherwise, such public or other notice (if any) thereof, as according to the circumstances of the case the Board of Trade direct.

Supply of Copies of Draft Certificate.

11. From the time of the publication of the first advertisement the promoters are to keep in the office mentioned in this behalf in the advertisement, a sufficient number of copies of the draft of the certificate as proposed by them, and are to furnish there copies to all persons applying for them, at the price of not more than 6d. each.

12. From the time of the settlement of the draft certificate by the Board of Trade the promoters are to keep in the office aforesaid copies of the draft supplied to them for that purpose by the Board of Trade, and are to furnish there copies thereof to all persons applying for them at such price (if any) as the Board of Trade from time to time direct.

Printing of Certificate.

13. Copies of the certificate printed by the printers of a Gazette are to be printed on ordinary white folio paper, similar in size to the paper on which the public general acts of Parliament are printed for public sale.

Whereas it is expedient to facilitate the making of branch and other lines of railway, and deviations of existing railways, and of railways in course of construction, and also the execution of new works connected with or for the purposes of existing railways:

And whereas the object aforesaid would be promoted if, where all landowners and other parties beneficially interested are consenting to the making of a railway or the execution of a work, the persons desirous of making or executing the same were enabled to obtain power to do so, on complying with the conditions of a general act of Parliament, without being obliged to procure a special act:

Be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited as "The Railways Construction Facilities Act, 1864."

2. In this act—

The term "lands" includes any estate, right, or interest in lands:

The term "the promoters" means in each case the company or persons intending to apply to the Board of Trade for such a certificate as is hereinafter provided for, and, after the application is made, the company or persons actually making the application, as the case may require:

The term "the railway" means in each case the railway and works intended by the promoters before the issuing of the certificate, and, after the issuing thereof, the railway and works therein comprised, as the case may require:

The term "the Lands Clauses Acts" means, so far as the enactment in which that term is used relates to England, or to a certificate to be operative in England, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845; and, so far as the same relates to Scotland, or to a certificate to be operative in Scotland, the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845; together with, in each case, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts Amendment Act, 1860; and so far as the same relates to Ireland, or to a certificate to be operative in Ireland, the Railways Act (Ireland) 1851, together with acts incorporated in or amending that act:

The term "the Companies Clauses Acts" means, so far as the enactment in which that term is used relates to England or Ireland, or to a certificate to be operative in England or Ireland, the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845; and, so far as the same relates to Scotland, or to a certificate to be operative in Scotland, the Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845; together with, in each case, the Companies Clauses Act, 1803:

The term "the Railways Clauses Acts" means, so far as the enactment in which that term is used relates to England or Ireland, or to a certificate to be operative in England or Ireland, the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845; and, so far as the same relates to Scotland, or to a certificate to be operative in Scotland, the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845; together with, in each case, the Railways Clauses Act, 1803:

The term "railway bill" means a bill pending in or intended to be introduced into either House of Parliament, having for its object or one of its objects to authorise the making of a railway:

The term "the Board of Trade" means the Lords of the Committee for the time being of her Majesty's Privy Council appointed for the consideration of matters relating to trade and foreign plantations.

Contracts for Lands.

3. Where promoters of a railway intend to apply, under this act, for authority to make the railway, they and all parties seised or possessed of or entitled to lands required for the railway shall, in order to the purchase or taking and sale of those lands for the railway, have all such powers and capacities as, in order to the purchase or taking and sale of lands required for an undertaking authorised by a special act of Parliament, are conferred by the Lands Clauses Acts on the promoters of the undertaking so authorised, and on parties seised or possessed of or entitled to lands, or any estate, right, or interest in lands, required for that undertaking; all which powers and capacities shall be enjoyed and may be exercised by the promoters, and by all such parties as aforesaid, as fully and effectually in all respects as if the promoters had obtained a special act incorporating the Lands Clauses Acts, and authorising them to make the railway, and to purchase or take the lands required for the same; subject, nevertheless, to the following restrictions and provisions; namely,

(1). Nothing herein shall confer on the promoters and parties aforesaid any of the powers or capacities conferred by the part of the Lands Clauses Acts with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement, or by the part of those acts with respect to the entry upon lands by the promoters of the undertaking, and by such provisions of those acts as provide for the determination or ascertainment of the amount of any purchase or compensation money, or the settlement of any apportionment or other matter, otherwise than by agreement (except only as to such of those provisions as provide for the determination of the amount of compensation to be paid for enfranchisement of copyholds; and for the purposes of the present section, sect. 96 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, relating to the enfranchisement of copyholds, shall be read and have effect as if the limitation of time therein contained were omitted therefrom):

(2). Any party under disability or incapacity, and not having power to sell and convey or release any lands, except under the Lands Clauses Acts, as applied by the present section, shall have capacity only to contract with the promoters for the sale of those lands, and shall not (before such a certificate of the Board of Trade, as is hereinafter provided for, comes into operation) have capacity, further or otherwise than if this act had not been passed, to carry the contract into execution, or in pursuance thereof to convey or deliver possession of or release those lands:

(3). The promoters (before such a certificate as aforesaid comes into operation) shall be empowered by this act only to contract for lands, and they shall not have capacity, further or otherwise than if this act had not been passed, to take or hold lands.

4. Where lands required for the railway belong to or are enjoyed by her Majesty the Queen, her heirs or successors, in right of the Crown, or form part of the possessions of the Duchy of Lancaster or of the Duchy of Cornwall, any contract for the purposes of this act may be entered into in respect of those lands, as follows; namely,

In the first-mentioned case, by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues, or one of them, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury:

In the secondly-mentioned case, by the Chancellor of the Duchy by writing under his hand, attested by the clerk of the council of the duchy:

In the thirdly-mentioned case, by the Duke of Cornwall or other the persons for the time being empowered to dispose for any purpose of lands of the duchy.

5. Notwithstanding anything in this act, it shall not be necessary for the promoters, before applying under this act for authority to make the railway, to enter into any contract with respect to any part of a turnpike road or public highway intended to be taken or used, or to be diverted or otherwise interfered with, for the purposes of the railway; but the Board of Trade before they settle a draft of such a certificate as hereinafter provided for, shall be satisfied that due provision is made for the interests of the trustees or other persons having the management of every such road or highway, and for the safety and convenience of the public in relation thereto.

Application for Certificate.

6. When the promoters have contracted for the purchase of all the lands required for the railway, and are desirous of obtaining a certificate under this act, they shall proceed as follows; namely,

(1). They shall apply to the Board of Trade for a certificate under this act:

(2). They shall deposit maps, plans, sections, and books of reference, and an estimate of the expense of the construction of the railway, and lodge a draft of the certificate as proposed by them, according to the general rules under this act:

(3). They shall publish notice of the application according to such general rules.

7. As soon as conveniently may be after the time for completion of the required deposit and notice, the Board of Trade shall proceed to inquire in such manner, and to such extent, as shall appear to them sufficient, whether the promoters have contracted for the purchase of all the lands required for the railway, and to inquire whether the promoters have complied with the requirements of the general rules respecting deposit and notice.

8. The Board of Trade, before settling the draft of a certificate, shall take into consideration any representation made to them, and shall duly inquire into the merits of any objection brought before them, respecting the application.

Opposition of Railway or Canal Company to Undertaking.

9. If in any case any railway or canal company desire to be heard by counsel, agents, and witnesses against the proposed undertaking, and (within such time as is prescribed by general rules under this act) lodge at the office of the Board of Trade a notice in writing to that effect (hereinafter referred to as a notice of opposition) in the form set forth in the schedule to this act (with such variations as circumstances require), in that case the Board of Trade, if the railway or canal company lodging the notice would be affected in any way by the proposed undertaking, shall not proceed on the application of the promoters.

10. Where the Board of Trade do not proceed on the application, they shall, not later in any year than the 15th February, if Parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within seven days after the next meeting of Parliament, lay before both Houses of Parliament a copy of the draft certificate lodged by the promoters and of the notice of opposition; and the promoters shall be at liberty to seek, by way of bill, in the same session, in such manner, and on such conditions, as the Houses of Parliament respectively, by Standing Order or otherwise, from time to time direct, such powers as were sought by them by way of certificate.

Settlement of Draft Certificate.

11. Where the Board of Trade proceed on the application, then, on being satisfied that the promoters have contracted for the purchase of all the lands required for the railway, and have complied with the requirements of the general rules respecting deposit and notice, they may, if they think fit, settle a draft of a certificate certifying to the effect, that the company, or persons therein specified, are authorised to make the railway therein described.

12. The Board of Trade may (subject to the provisions of this act) insert in the draft certificate such provisions as they, according to the circumstances of the case, deem necessary or proper for better effectuating the purposes of the certificate; and the same shall be deemed to all intents part of the certificate.

13. The certificate may be in the form set forth in the schedule to this act, with such provisions as aforesaid.

Submission of Draft Certificate to Houses of Parliament.

14. The Board of Trade shall lay the draft certificate settled by them before both Houses of Parliament, within seven days after the same is settled, if Parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within seven days after the next meeting of Parliament, but not later in any year than the 1st June.

15. On the draft certificate being settled, the promoters shall give notice thereof, according to general rules under this act.

16. If either House of Parliament, within six weeks after the draft of a certificate settled by the Board of Trade is laid before that House, resolves that the certificate ought not to be made, the same shall not be further proceeded with; and in that case, all contracts for the purchase or taking of lands for the purposes of the undertaking shall cease to be binding on either party.

Issue, Publication, and Effect of Certificate.

17. If either House of Parliament, within the period aforesaid, thinks fit to resolve that the certificate ought not to be made, then, as soon as the period of six weeks after the laying of the draft certificate before both Houses of Parliament has expired, the Board of Trade may make and issue a certificate in conformity with such draft.

18. The certificate shall be published in the London or Edinburgh or Dublin Gazette, respectively, if the railway will be situate wholly in England or Scotland, or in Ireland; and shall be published both in the London and in the Edinburgh Gazette, if the railway will be situate partly in England and partly in Scotland.

19. As from the time (not being prior to such publication) in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed, then as from the time of such publication, the certificate shall have the same force and operation, and shall be as absolutely valid and conclusive to all intents, as if the contents thereof (taken in conjunction with this act) had been expressly enacted by Parliament; and the validity of the certificate shall not be impeached on account of any alleged informality in any court, or elsewhere.

20. The certificate shall be judicially noticed, without being specially pleaded.

21. Terms used in the certificate shall have the same meanings as they have when used in this act.

Duration of Powers under Certificate.

22. If the company, or persons by the certificate empowered to make the railway do not, within five years from the commencement of the operation of the certificate, or within any shorter period prescribed therein, complete the railway, and open it for public traffic, then (subject to any provisions and qualifications in the certificate contained) all the powers and authorities given by the certificate shall, from and after the expiration of the time aforesaid, cease, except as to so much of the railway as is then completed.

Lands.

23. The Lands Clauses Acts shall be incorporated with the certificate (which shall for this purpose be deemed the special act), except as may be therein excepted, and except as to the following provisions; namely,

- (1). With respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement:
- (2). With respect to the entry upon lands by the promoters of the undertaking:
- (3). So much of those acts as provides for the determination or ascertainment of the amount of any purchase or compensation money, or the settlement of any apportionment or other matter, otherwise than by agreement (but excluding from this exception so much of those acts as provides for the determination of the amount of compensation to be paid for enfranchisement of copyholds).

Incorporation of Company.

24. Where the promoters are not a company incorporated by special act, or by previous certificate under this act, and are seven or more in number, a company shall be incorporated by the certificate, for the purposes thereof.

25. Where the promoters are not a company incorporated by special act, or by previous certificate under this act, and are less than seven in number, a company may be incorporated by the certificate for the purposes thereof, if the promoters so desire.

26. Where the certificate incorporates a company, it shall contain proper provisions, with apt terms, for creating a body corporate, by an appropriate name, with perpetual succession and a common seal, and with power to take, hold, and dispose of lands and other property, for the purposes, and subject to the restrictions, of the certificate, and may confer on the company power to borrow on mortgage, and all other usual or proper powers.

27. In every such case the Companies Clauses Acts shall be incorporated with the certificate (which shall be deemed the special act).

28. It shall not be lawful for any company empowered by a certificate under this act to issue any share created under the authority of the certificate, nor shall any such share vest in the person accepting the same, unless and until a sum not being less than one-fifth part of the amount of such share is paid up in respect thereof.

29. Every company, whether incorporated by special act or by certificate, empowered by a certificate to borrow money, shall, as regards the money so authorised to be borrowed, be subject to the following restrictions; namely,

- (1). They shall not exercise the said powers of borrowing any money until the whole of the share capital authorised by the certificate is subscribed for or taken, and until one-half thereof is actually paid up, and until they prove to the justice who is to certify under sect. 40 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or (in Scotland) to the sheriff, who is to certify under sect. 42 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, as the case may be, before he so certifies, that shares for the whole of the capital are issued and accepted, and that not less than one-fifth part of the amount of each separate share has been paid up on account thereof before or at the time of the issue or acceptance thereof, and that all such shares were taken in good faith, and are held by the subscribers or their assigns, those subscribers or their assigns being legally liable for the same (of which matters the certificate of the justice or sheriff shall be sufficient evidence);
- (2). They shall not borrow a larger sum in the whole than one-third of the amount of the share capital authorised by the certificate:
- (3). They shall not out of money raised under the certificate by calls or borrowing pay interest or dividend to a shareholder on the amount of calls made on his shares, whether created under the certificate or otherwise (but this provision shall not prevent them paying to a shareholder under the certificate such interest on money advanced by him beyond the amount of calls actually made, as is allowed by the Companies Clauses Acts):

- (4). They shall not out of money so raised pay or deposit any money that may be required to be paid or deposited in relation to any application to Parliament or the Board of Trade:
- (5). They shall apply every part of the money so raised only for purposes for which it is by the certificate authorised to be applied.

30. Contracts relative to the purchase or taking of lands for the railway, entered into by the promoters before the incorporation of the company by the certificate, shall be as binding on the company as if they had been entered into by the company.

Construction of Railway.

31. The Railways Clauses Acts shall be incorporated with the certificate (which shall be deemed the special act), except as may be therein excepted, and except as to the following provisions; namely,

- (1). Such of the provisions with respect to the construction of the railway and the works connected therewith as relate to the correction of errors and omissions in plans or to plans and sections of alterations:
- (2). With respect to the temporary occupation of lands near the railway during the construction thereof:
- (3). With respect to leasing the railway:

And subject to the following provisions; namely,

- (1). Nothing herein shall confer power for the taking or using of lands for deviation or for any other purpose, otherwise than by agreement:
- (2). Any provision referring to the datum line described in the section approved of by Parliament shall be read as referring to the datum line described in the section approved of by the Board of Trade.

32. Where the promoters desire to make any alteration in the deposited plan or section, they may do so with the consent of the Board of Trade; but the Board of Trade shall not settle a draft of a certificate without being satisfied that all parties interested in lands liable to be affected by or in consequence of the alteration consent thereto.

33. Every railway made under this act in England or Scotland shall be made on the gauge of four feet eight inches and half an inch, unless in any case the certificate prescribes the making of the railway on the gauge of seven feet, or on both those gauges.

Every railway made under this act in Ireland shall be made on the gauge of five feet three inches.

Provisions to secure Completion of Railway.

34. After the certificate is ready to be issued, and before the same is issued, by the Board of Trade, the promoters, unless they are a previously existing company possessed of a railway open for public traffic, shall within such time as general rules under this act direct, pay as a deposit a sum of money not less than 8l. per centum on the amount of their estimate of the expense of the construction of the railway, as follows; namely,

Where the railway, or any part thereof, will be situate in England—into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privy of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in England:

Where the railway will be situate wholly in Scotland—either into the Bank of England in manner aforesaid, or (at the option of the promoters) into a bank in Scotland established by act of Parliament or royal charter, in the name and with the privy of the Queen's Remembrancer of the Court of Exchequer in Scotland:

Where the railway will be situate in Ireland—into the Bank of Ireland, in the name and with the privy of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in Ireland.

35. The Board of Trade may issue their warrant to the promoters for such payment into court, which warrant shall be a sufficient authority for the persons therein named, or the majority or survivors of them, to pay the money therein mentioned into the Bank therein mentioned, in the name and with the privy of the officer therein mentioned, and for that officer to receive the same, to be placed to his account there, ex parte the railway therein mentioned, according to the method (prescribed by statute, or general rules or orders of court, or otherwise), for the time being in force respecting the payment of money into the said courts respectively, and without fee or reward.

36. Provided, that in lieu, wholly or in part, of the payment of money, the promoters may bring into court as a deposit an equivalent sum of Bank Annuities, or of any stocks, funds, or securities on which cash under the control of the respective court is for the time being permitted to be invested, or of Exchequer bills (the value thereof being taken at the price at which the promoters originally purchased the same, as appearing by the broker's certificate of that purchase); and in that case the Board of Trade shall vary their warrant accordingly.

37. At any time when the office of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland is closed, a deposit under this act may nevertheless be made, in such manner as general orders of the respective courts authorise and direct.

38. Where money is so paid into the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland, the court may, on the application of the persons named in the warrant of the Board of Trade, or of the majority or survivors of them, order that the same be invested in such stocks, funds, or securities, as the applicants desire and the court thinks fit.

39. In the subsequent provisions of this act, the term "the deposit fund" means the money deposited, or the stocks, funds, or securities in which the same is invested, or the Bank Annuities, stocks, funds, securities, or Exchequer bills deposited, as the case may be; and the term "the depositors" means the persons named in the warrant of the Board of Trade authorising the deposit, or the majority or survivors of those persons, their executors, administrators, or assigns.

40. The court in which the deposit is made shall, on the application of the depositors, order the deposit fund to be paid, transferred, or delivered out to the applicants, or as they direct, in any of the following events; namely,

- (1). If, within the time in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed, then within five years from the commencement of the operation of the certificate, the company, or persons thereby empowered to make the railway, complete it, and open it for public traffic; or
- (2). If, within the same time, they (being a company) prove to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade that one-half of their nominal capital authorised by the certificate is paid up, and that they have expended a like amount for the purposes of the certificate; or
- (3). If, at any time after the issuing of the certificate, they execute and deliver to the solicitor of her Majesty's Treasury a bond with a surety or sureties (such bond being prepared to the satisfaction of, and such surety or sureties being approved by, the said solicitor), in a penal sum of twice the amount of the money required to be deposited, conditioned to the effect following, namely, for payment to her Majesty, her heirs or successors, of the amount of the money required to be deposited, if the company or persons empowered by the certificate do not, within the time aforesaid, either complete the railway, and open it for public traffic, or (being a company) give such proof as aforesaid respecting their capital and expenditure.

41. If the company, or persons empowered by the certificate to make the railway, do not, within the time in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed, then within five years from the commencement of the operation of the certificate, do one or other of the following things, namely—

- (1). Complete the railway, and open it for public traffic; or
- (2). Give (being a company) such proof as hereinbefore mentioned respecting their capital and expenditure; or
- (3). Execute and deliver such a bond as is hereinbefore described—then and in every such case the deposit fund shall, from and after the expiration of the time aforesaid, be forfeited to her Majesty, and shall accordingly be paid, transferred, or delivered out to or for the account of her Majesty's Exchequer, in such manner as the court in which the deposit is made thinks fit to order, on the application of the solicitor of her Majesty's Treasury, on notice to such parties (if any) as the court thinks fit; and the deposit fund, when so paid, transferred, or delivered, or the proceeds thereof, shall be carried to, and form part of, the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

42. Where any such bond as aforesaid is given, the amount recovered thereon shall be paid to the account of her Majesty's Exchequer, and shall be carried to, and form part of, the said Consolidated Fund.

43. The depositors shall be entitled to receive payment of the interest or dividends from time to time accruing on the deposit fund while in court; and the court in which the deposit is made may from time to time, on the application of the depositors, make such order as seems fit respecting the payment of the interest or dividends accordingly.

44. The certificate of the Board of Trade that such proof as aforesaid respecting the capital and expenditure of any company has been given to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade, and the certificate of the solicitor of her Majesty's Treasury that such bond as aforesaid has in any case been prepared, executed, and delivered to his satisfaction, shall respectively be sufficient evidence of the matters therein certified.

45. The issuing in any case of any warrant or certificate relating to deposit or to the deposit fund, or any error in any such warrant or certificate or in relation thereto, shall not make the Board of Trade, or the person signing the warrant or certificate on their behalf, in any manner liable for or in respect of the deposit fund, or the interest of or dividends on the same, or any part thereof respectively.

46. Any application under this act to the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland shall be made in a summary way in such manner as general orders of those courts respectively direct.

47. The Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, with the advice and assistance of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery and the Master of the Rolls, and the Vice-Chancellors, or any two of these judges, and the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, with the advice and assistance of the Lord Justice of the Court of Appeal in Chancery in Ireland and of the Master of the Rolls in Ireland, may respectively from time to time make such general orders as seem fit for the regulation of the practice under this act of the Court of Chancery in England and Ireland respectively.

48. Where a certificate is obtained by a previously existing company possessed of a railway open for public traffic, then, if the company fail to complete the railway and open it for public traffic within the time in the certificate prescribed, and if none is prescribed, then within five years from the commencement of the operation of the certificate, the company shall be liable to a penalty of not less than 20*l.*, and not exceeding 50*l.*, for every day during which such failure continues, except only in respect of any time during which it appears from the certificate of the Board of Trade that the company were prevented from completing the railway or opening it for public traffic by unforeseen accident or circumstances beyond their control, but the want of sufficient funds shall not be deemed a circumstance beyond their control within the meaning of this provision.

Tolls and Charges for Use of Railway.

49. The proprietors of the railway may demand and take, in respect of the railway, tolls, and charges not exceeding the sums specified in the schedule to this act, subject and according to the regulations therein specified.

50. The Board of Trade may nevertheless by a certificate vary the tolls and charges and regulations specified in the schedule to this act, or any of them, if in any case it seems to them necessary or proper, under the circumstances, to do so.

Application of General Railway Acts.

51. The enactments described in the schedule to this act, and any enactments amending, perpetuating, or otherwise affecting any of them, so far as the same are in force at the passing of this act, shall extend and apply, as the case may require, to the railway, and to the company or persons empowered by the certificate to make the railway, and shall in all respects operate in relation thereto respectively as if they were expressly repeated and re-enacted in this act, subject, nevertheless, and according to the following variations and provisions; namely,

- (1). For the purposes and within the meaning of any of those enactments, the railway shall be deemed to be a railway made and constructed and carried on under the authority of Parliament and under the powers and provisions of an act of Parliament, and the certificate (taken in conjunction with this act) shall be deemed to be a special act of Parliament regulating or relating to the railway, or the company, body, or persons empowered to make the same (as the case may require):
- (2). Such of those enactments as refer to the time of the passing of an act of Parliament for the construction of a railway, or to the last day of the session in which such act is passed, shall respectively be read and have effect as referring to the time of the commencement of the operation of the certificate:
- (3). The terms "company" and "railway company" used in any of those enactments shall respectively include any persons empowered by the certificate to make the railway:
- (4). Such of those enactments as refer to the directors, or any director, or the secretary, chief or other clerk, accountant, treasurer, or other officer of a company, shall extend and apply to every or any one of the persons (not being a company) empowered by the certificate to make the railway:
- (5). Such of those enactments as refer to a writing under the common seal of the company shall be read and have effect as referring to a writing under the hand and seal of any one of such persons, as aforesaid:
- (6). Such of those enactments as impose any penalty or forfeiture, or any pecuniary liability or any obligation, on a company, or give any right, remedy, or process against a company, shall be read and have effect (so far as the nature and circumstances of the case admit) as imposing a like penalty, forfeiture, liability, or obligation on, or as giving a like right, remedy, or process against, every or any one of such persons as aforesaid, but not so as to authorise the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture from, or the enforcement of any pecuniary liability against, more than one of such persons in respect of the same offence, matter, or thing:
- (7). The amount of any compensation to be made to the owners and occupiers of any lands for loss or injury or inconvenience sustained by them respectively by reason of any works done under the authority of any of those enactments shall, in case of dispute, be settled in manner directed by the Lands Clauses Acts and the Railways Clauses Acts as respectively applicable to the case:
- (8). Such of those enactments as provide for the case of the Board of Trade certifying that the public safety requires additional land to be taken by a company for the purpose of giving increased width to the embankments or inclination to the slopes of the railway, or for making approaches to bridges or archways, or for doing works for the repair or prevention of accidents or slips happening or apprehended to the cuttings, embankments, or other works of the railway, shall be read and have effect, as regards such portions of land as are mentioned in any certificate so given by the Board of Trade, as if compulsory powers of purchasing and taking lands had been contained in the certificate under this act authorising the making of the railway, and the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts and the Railways Clauses Acts relative to the compulsory purchase or taking of land had been incorporated with that certificate:
- (9). If the railway is in any respect constructed contrary to the provisions of the certificate, or of this act, it shall be deemed to be constructed contrary to the provisions of any of those enactments applicable in the case:
- (10). Nothing herein shall extend or make applicable, for the purposes of this act, to or in any one of the parts of the United Kingdom, any of those enactments not in force there independently of this act.

Miscellaneous.

52. Nothing in this act shall make it obligatory on the Board of Trade to settle a draft of a certificate in any case if it appears to the Board of Trade for any reason that the application of the promoters should not be complied with; and in case the Board of Trade reject any application, all contracts for the purchase or taking of lands for the purposes of the undertaking shall cease to be binding on either party.

53. Nothing in the certificate shall exempt the railway, or the company, or persons to whom it belongs, from the provisions of any general act of Parliament relating to railways, or to the better audit of the accounts of railway companies, passed before or after the issuing of the certificate, or from any revision and alteration, under the authority of Parliament, of the maximum tolls and charges allowed to be taken under the certificate.

54. All the provisions of this act which relate to the making of a railway shall extend and apply, mutatis mutandis, to the making or executing of any work connected with or for the purposes of a railway (as distinguished from the construction of a railway).

55. Subject and according to the provisions of this act, the Board of Trade may, on a joint application or on two or more separate applications, issue a certificate empowering two or more companies, or persons, respectively, to jointly make or execute the whole, or to separately make or execute parts, of a work connected with or for the purposes of a railway, and to jointly or separately use the whole or parts thereof; and all the provisions of this act which relate to the making of a railway, or the making or executing of a work, shall extend and apply to the making or executing of the whole and the separate parts of such work as last aforesaid; and the form of the certificate may be adapted to the circumstances of the case.

56. Where the certificate is obtained by a previously existing company incorporated by special act or by certificate, the certificate may authorise the company to raise, as capital, for the purposes of the certificate, such additional sum of money as therein limited, by the issue of new shares or new stock, either ordinary or preference, or partly ordinary and partly preference, or partly in that mode and partly by borrowing on mortgage, at the option of the company, or as may be prescribed in the certificate, and with power to create and issue debenture stock.

In every such case the Companies Clauses Acts shall be incorporated with the certificate.

In every such case the restrictions by this act imposed on a company when originally incorporated by certificate, with respect to the exercise of their borrowing power, and to the application of money raised under the certificate by calls or borrowing, shall extend and apply to such previously existing company in respect of such additional capital.

57. Where the certificate is obtained by a previously existing company, incorporated by special act or by certificate, it shall be the duty of the Board of Trade not to settle a draft of the certificate without being satisfied that the members of the company have approved of the application to the Board of Trade, in like manner as, under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament for the time being in force, their approval of a railway bill would be required to be given in the same case.

58. Subject and according to the restrictions and provisions of this act, the Board of Trade, on the application of any company or persons empowered by a certificate, may from time to time amend, extend, or vary by certificate the previous certificate, and may by certificate revoke the previous certificate.

59. If in any case it is made to appear to the Board of Trade that any error has been committed in a certificate, or in relation thereto, the Board of Trade may, subject and according to the restrictions and provisions of this act, on the application of any company, body, or person affected by the error, and on notice to the company or persons empowered by the certificate, correct the error by a further certificate.

60. A copy of the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette containing a certificate, or a copy of a certificate, purporting to be printed by the printers of the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, shall be conclusive evidence of the certificate, and of the due publication thereof, without any proof of the Gazette, or without any proof of the copy having been in fact so printed, as the case may be.

61. The company or persons empowered by a certificate shall at all times keep at their head offices copies of the certificate printed by the printers of the Gazette, or one of the Gazettes in which the same was published, in such form as general rules under this act direct, to be sold to all persons desiring to buy the same, at a price not exceeding 1s. for each copy.

If any company or persons fail to comply with this provision they shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20l., and to a further penalty, not exceeding 5l. for every day during which such failure continues after the first penalty is incurred.

62. Penalties under this act, or under a certificate, the recovery and application whereof are not otherwise provided for, shall be recovered and applied as penalties under the Railways Clauses Acts are recoverable and applicable.

63. The act of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. (c. 83), "to compel clerks of the peace and other persons to take the custody of such documents as shall be directed to be deposited with them under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament," shall apply to documents required to be deposited by general rules under this act.

64. The general rules under this act shall, in the first instance, be those set forth in the schedule to this act; and the Board of Trade may from time to time, for the better execution of this act, make general rules adding to, altering, or revoking any general rules for the time being in force under this act; but any general rules so made by the Board of Trade shall not have effect unless, and until, they are laid before both Houses of Parliament; and if either House of Parliament, within six weeks after the same are laid before that House, thinks fit to resolve that the same, or any part thereof, ought not to take effect, the same, or that part thereof (as the case may be), shall not take effect; otherwise all rules made by the Board of Trade under the present section shall be of the same force and effect as if they had been comprised in the schedule to this act.

All general rules which are to take effect under the present section shall be published in the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Gazettes.

65. Not later than the 1st July in each year the Board of Trade shall lay before both Houses of Parliament a report respecting the applications to and proceedings of the Board of Trade under this act during the year then last past.

THE SCHEDULE REFERRED TO IN THE FOREGOING ACT.

REGULATIONS.

1. For passengers, animals, or goods conveyed on the railway for a distance less than that prescribed in the certificate as the short distance, and if none is prescribed then for a distance less than six miles, charges are to be payable as for the short distance prescribed, and if none is prescribed then as for six miles.

2. In respect of passengers, every fraction of a mile beyond an integral number of miles is to be deemed a mile.

3. In respect of animals and goods, for a fraction of a mile beyond the short distance prescribed, or if none is prescribed then beyond six miles or beyond any greater number of miles, charges are to be payable in proportion to the number of quarters of a mile contained in that fraction; and a fraction of a quarter of a mile is to be deemed a quarter of a mile.

4. For a fraction of a ton charges are to be payable according to the number of quarters of a ton in that fraction; and a fraction of a quarter of a ton is to be deemed a quarter of a ton.

5. Every passenger travelling on the railway may, without charge, cause to be carried in the same train with him his ordinary luggage, not exceeding the weight prescribed in the certificate, and if none is prescribed then not exceeding the weight of 120lbs. for a first-class passenger, 100lbs. for a second-class passenger, and 60lbs. for a third-class passenger.

6. The restriction as to charges for passengers does not extend to special trains when required by passengers, but applies only to the ordinary or express passenger or goods trains appointed by the proprietors of the railway.

7. Except as to stone and timber, weight is to be determined according to avoirdupois weight.

Fourteen cubic feet of stone, and forty cubic feet of oak, mahogany, teak, beech, or ash, and fifty cubic feet of any other timber, are to be deemed one ton, and so in proportion for any smaller quantity.

8. In addition to the charges in Table III, a reasonable charge is to be payable for the loading, covering, and unloading of goods at any station, being a terminal station in respect of such goods, and for delivery and collection, and any other services incidental to the duty or business of a carrier, where such services, or any of them, are or is performed by the proprietors of the railway.

A station is not to be considered a terminal station in respect of goods, unless they are received there direct from the consignor, or are directed to be delivered there to the consignee.

9. The term "small packages" does not include articles sent in large aggregate quantities, although made up of separate parcels, such as bags of sugar, coffee, meal, and the like; but applies only to single parcels in separate packages.

10. Nothing herein or in the certificate contained is to prevent the proprietors of the railway from taking any charge over and above the charges hereinbefore limited for the conveyance of goods of any description by agreement with the owners of or any persons in charge of such goods, either in respect of the conveyance thereof (except small packages) by passenger trains, or by reason of any other special service performed by the proprietors of the railway in relation thereto.

(v).—General Rules.

Form of Application.

1. The application to the Board of Trade for a certificate is to be made by a memorial in writing, signed by the promoters, or some or one of them, and lodged at the office of the Board of Trade.

2. Together with the memorial the promoters are to lodge—

(a). A printed draft of the certificate as proposed by the promoters:

(b). An estimate of the expense of the construction of the proposed new railway or work (if any), signed by the person making the estimate.

Plans, Sections, &c.

3. Maps, plans, sections, and books of reference deposited by the promoters are to be such, in respect of scale and contents and otherwise, as, under the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament for the time being in force, they would be obliged to deposit if they were proceeding in the same case by a railway bill.

4. The maps, plans, sections, and books of reference aforesaid are to be deposited at the office of the Board of Trade at the time when the memorial is lodged there.

5. They are also to be deposited for public inspection at the same offices of the clerks of the peace or sheriff clerks, at which, under the Standing Orders aforesaid, the promoters would be obliged to deposit them if they were proceeding in the same case by a railway bill.

6. Where any part of the railway will be situate within the limits of the metropolis, as defined by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a copy of so much of the plans and sections as relates to that part is to be deposited at the office of the Metropolitan Board of Works.

7. A copy of so much of the plans and sections as relates to each parish in which any part of the railway will be situate, or in which any lands intended to be taken for the railway are situate, together with a copy of so much of the book of reference as relates to that parish, is to be deposited for public inspection with the officer or person with whom, under the Standing Orders aforesaid, the promoters would be obliged to deposit the same if they were proceeding in the same case by a railway bill.

Advertisements as to Application.

8. After all the deposits aforesaid have been made, notice of the application to the Board of Trade is to be given by advertisement published as follows; namely,

Where the railway will be situate wholly in one county, city, or town, or county of a city or town, then once in each of three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper of that county, city, or town, or county of a city or town:

Where the railway will not be situate wholly in one county, city, or town, or county of a city or town, then once in each of three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper of the county, city, or town, or county of a city or town, wherein the head office of the promoters is situate, and also once in each of three successive weeks in some one and the same newspaper of each county, city, or town, or county of a city or town, wherein any part of the railway will be situate: If in any case there is not any such newspaper as hereinafore described, then in like manner in a newspaper of some adjoining or neighbouring county:

In every case, once at least in the London, Edinburgh, or Dublin Gazette, respectively, if the railway will be situate wholly in England or Scotland, or in Ireland, and both in the London and in the Edinburgh Gazette, if the railway will be situate partly in England and partly in Scotland.

9. The advertisements are to be published either in the month of June or in the month of November, and not at any other time.

10. Each advertisement is to give the address of an office in London where copies of the draft certificate will be supplied as hereinafter directed.

11. Each advertisement is to state that all persons desirous of making any representation to the Board of Trade, or of bringing before them any objection, respecting the application, may do so by letter addressed to the secretary of the Board of Trade, on or before the 1st August or 1st January next succeeding the date of the advertisement, according as the same is published in the month of June or in the month of November.

Deposit of Copies of Advertisements.

12. Within one week after the publication of the latest advertisement, a copy of each of the newspapers and Gazettes containing the several advertisements is to be lodged at the office of the Board of Trade.

13. Within the same time, a printed copy of the Gazette advertisement is to be deposited for public inspection in each of the same offices, and with each of the same officers and persons, in which or with whom the maps, plans, sections, and books of reference or parts thereof were deposited.

14. The last-mentioned deposit of a copy of the Gazette advertisement may be made (if the promoters choose) by means of a registered post letter, and any deposit so made shall be deemed made on the day on which such letter would be delivered in ordinary course of post.

Note of Time of Deposit.

15. Where any document is deposited under these rules for public inspection, the clerk of the peace, sheriff clerk, or other officer or person, in whose office or with whom it is deposited, is to make thereon a memorial in writing denoting the time at which it was deposited.

Notice to Road Trustees.

16. Where any part of a turnpike road or public highway is intended to be taken or used, or to be diverted or otherwise interfered with, for the purposes of the railway, the promoters in the month of June or November (as the case may be), in which the advertisements are published, are to serve notice of the application on the trustees or other persons having the management of such road or highway.

Notice of Opposition.

17. Notice of opposition by railway or canal company is to be lodged at the office of the Board of Trade not later than the 1st August or 1st January next succeeding the date of the advertisement of application, according as the same is published in the month of June or in the month of November.

Notice of Settlement of Draft Certificate.

18. On the draft certificate being settled by the Board of Trade, the promoters are to serve a copy thereof, with a notice that the draft has been settled by the Board of Trade, on every company, body, or person, by whom any representation or objection respecting the application was made to, or brought before, the Board of Trade, and are also to give, by advertisement or otherwise, such public or other notice (if any) thereof, as, according to the circumstances of the case, the Board of Trade direct.

Supply of Copies of Draft Certificate.

19. From the time of the publication of the first advertisement the promoters are to keep in the office mentioned in this behalf in the advertisement, a sufficient number of copies of the draft of the certificate as proposed by them, and are to furnish there copies to all persons applying for them at the price of not more than 6d. each.

20. From the time of the settlement of the draft certificate by the Board of Trade, the promoters are to keep in the office aforesaid copies of the draft supplied to them for that purpose by the Board of Trade, and are to furnish there copies thereof to all persons applying for them at such price (if any) as the Board of Trade from time to time direct.

Deposit of Money.

21. The deposit of money or Government securities in court is to be made within one month after notice from the Board of Trade that they are prepared to issue the certificate.

Printing of Certificate.

22. Copies of the certificate, printed by the printers of a Gazette, are to be printed on ordinary white folio paper, similar in size to the paper on which the public general acts of Parliament are printed for public sale.
